CHINKS IN A MUSS.

Whatever may be the matter with China and other countries, it is said that for the reason that most of them have so little to feed upon and so very much hard work to do they suffer greatly with neuralgia. It is doubtful if they could suffer more than our people do, owing at times to the extremely damp chilly atmosphere in winter, which seems to have a peculiar influence upon the nervous system so as to produce this affection, but happily for our comfort and the cure of the pain, St. Jacobs Oil is recognized as its sovereign remedy. With pain produced from cold there is an absolute need of the warmth and strength which St. Jacobs Oil gives, and through this means it performs its office promptly and surely.

"Their grandfather was hanged." "How can they hold up their heads as they do?" "Oh, a broken neck isn't necessarily hereditary."

CUSTOMS CASES DECIDED.

The general appraisers of goods passing through the Custom House have made several decisions lately which, until passed upon by the Secretary of the Treasury, will hold good. The appropriation of $75,000 in the sundry civil service appropriation bill for the detection of violations of the internal revenue laws caused some debate. Kitchin (D.) and Linney (R.) of North Carolina, were bitter in their denunciation of the injustice of the system of paying for information. The former moved to strike out the item. After some further debate a vote was taken and the motion to strike out the appropriation was adopted. Cannon gave notice that he would ask for an aye and no vote when the bill was reported to the House.

ALASKA BREAD.

How a Practical Miner Prepares His "Staff of Life."

Bread in Alaska means always baking powder bread or biscuit, for no other kind is possible. There is no yeast or any other means of raising dough. An experienced miner, one who has been in Alaska five years, has just given us two of his most useful receipts.

Those who think of going to the Klondike should keep them, and those who stay at home will be interested in knowing how a practical miner prepares his "staff of life."

Bread; quart of flour, two, tablespoonsful Cleveland's baking powder, and half a teaspoonful of salt; mix up with cold water or milk until stiff. Grease the pan, bake until cooked (about half an hour).

Biscuit; quart of flour, two teaspoonsful Cleveland's baking powder, and half a teaspoonful of salt. Mix thoroughly while dry with lard or bacon fat. Then mix with water or milk until stiff enough to roll out. Cut into circles with top of baking powder can or cup; bake about fifteen minutes.

Several other Alaska receipts together with lists of groceries, clothing and supplies to take with one are published in a Klondike circular. This circular, together with a cook book of four hundred receipts, will be mailed you free if you send stamp and address to Cleveland Baking Powder Co., 81 Fulton street, New York.

Be sure to mention the Klondike circular if you want it; otherwise, the cook book only will be sent.

ALMOST CAME TO BLOWS.

An Incident Illustrative of Chicago Language and Theatrical Tempers.

The other morning there dropped into the gallery of a photographer who has long made a specialty of taking the pictures of theatrical celebrities a big strapping western man who came to see his friend, the photographer. The young woman behind the counter, who knew the caller, had just been reading in a newspaper a savage "roast" of his native city of Chicago. She handed the paper to the westerner to read, expecting to get some amusement out of his comments. The Chicagoan was in the midst of his reading, bristling with wrath, when the husband of a well known actress entered the room. A framed portrait of the actress, taken several years ago, stood on an easel in a corner. The husband walked up to the picture, and after contemplating it for a few minutes said:

"My wife is certainly a remarkable woman. That picture was taken all of five years ago, yet she is younger looking and handsomer today than it is."

Just then the westerner finished the Chicago story.

"Well, I don't think," he exclaimed loudly and emphatically, throwing the paper down upon the counter.

"What right have you, sir, to think anything about it?" demanded the actress' husband angrily.

"Who gave you control over my thinker?" retorted the astonished westerner.

"Think what you please to yourself, but you shan't insult my wife, sir," shouted the husband.

"Your wife? Where is she? Are you a lunatic?"

"No, sir, but you are a big bully," cried the husband, dancing with wrath.

The little woman behind the counter, who had been convulsed with laughter, tried to explain the mistake, but the indignant husband refused to listen. Nothing but an apology would satisfy him, and he made a dramatic exit from the gallery, saying that the westerner would "hear from him again." He went home and wrote a letter to the photographer saying that he had been insulted and threatening to withdraw his wife's custom if the apology was not forthcoming. The photographer was obliged to write several letters before he could calm the troubled waters. Meantime the Chicagoan went home, firm in the conviction that he had narrowly escaped hitting a crazy man.—New York Sun.

Stories of Henry George.

The activity and power of intellect of the late Henry George did not prevent absentmindedness. A writer in The Review of Reviews says that this quality was "the jest of his circle."

Names escaped him. I heard him say to Mr. Dayton, the candidate on his ticket for comptroller and one of the best known men in New York:

"You won't mind it, I hope, if I forget your name. I am so conscious of the danger of getting names wrong that when the need of remembering comes it rattles me, and away the name goes."

He came late to a dinner at the Lotus club, where he was to discuss with some friends the question of his being a candidate in apprehended contingencies. It was raining, and he took from his pocket the slippers with which Mrs. George had insisted on providing him in case he should get his feet wet, and as he put them on he apologized with honest gravity:

"I lost time looking for a man I kept asking after as Kinsella, and it turned out his right name was Moriarity. At least I think that was what he told me it was when I found him."

But there was no absentmindedness when discussion of the business in hand ensued; he was keen and wide awake.

Antwerp Bells.

From the cathedral tower at Antwerp 80 bells have for over 200 years rung out the grandest music for the benefit of the people living on the green fields which border the Scheldt. Once a year, in the month of February, the authorities select the music, and the organ plays every hour from the old masters of Christian song.

When Cortes invaded Mexico for the second time, he had 80 musketeers and 80 crossbowmen.

GABE TUCKER'S DEFECTION.

There were a good many pretty hard characters among the early-day Kansas cowboys, but it is doubtful if there was one who held any advantage over Gabe Tucker. Gabe often boasted that the one consuming ambition of his life was to become the champion tough and terror of the cattle range. He drank, gambled and fought, and was always ready to engage in a shooting scrape at a moment's notice, and on the least provocation. And swear! Why, he was simply eloquent in the use of profanity.

Gabe had no more respect for religion than he had for the dirt under his feet. He derided and scoffed everything of a religious nature, and some of his remarks were so bold and blasphemous that even his cowboy companions heard them with a creeping sensation of awe and fear.

One of Gabe's chief Sunday enjoyments was to come into town, fill up on whisky and proceed to break up religious services. He would charge up and down in front of the building where services were being held, yelling and cursing in the most horrible manner, and peppering the side of the house with bullets or shattering the glass from the windows. Frequently, when night services were being held, he would ride up to the door and proceed coolly and calmly to shoot out the lights, one after another, until the congregation was left in perfect darkness. Of course the people of the town did not approve of Gabe's style, and they were generally agreed that his devilry ought to be stopped, but when it came to stopping it, that was another matter.

Things went along in this way for a long time, but at last one Sunday a new minister occupied the pulpit. He was a young college graduate from somewhere east of the Mississippi, rash, impulsive and unacquainted with the natures of the untamed western cowboys. In the course of his sermon he took occasion to speak of Gabe Tucker's devilry, and he denounced it in no uncertain terms. His audience listened in astonishment and trembled with fear for his safety. Well, Gabe heard about the preacher's remarks, and the next Sunday he rode up to the church, tied his horse and went in and took a seat among the congregation, but well back from the pulpit. He sat quietly while the opening hymns were sung and a prayer was offered, but the congregation kept eyeing him suspiciously. The minister came forward, read a passage of Scripture, offered a few words of prayer and began to deliver his sermon. When he had spoken a dozen sentences Gabe suddenly arose and drawing his pistol began to plant bullets in the floor all around the preacher's feet. The audience yelled and screamed and crawled under the benches while the preacher hopped and dodged about, scared within an inch of his life. It was an exciting time and Gabe was the only person in the house who was calm and cool. He continued to fire his pistols until he had but two balls left and with those he cut a little bunch of hair from either side of the preacher's head just as a reminder of his proficient marksmanship. Then he went out, mounted his horse, gave a series of whoops and dashed away across the prairie. The young minister went back east right away and for a long while there was no preaching in the town. Gabe's fame had spread abroad, and preachers were disposed to give him a wide berth. He boasted that he had broken up the church and that there would never be any more services in the town while he remained there.

In this, however, Gabe was mistaken, for services were again held in the town, and Gabe Tucker was one of the most regular, earnest and devout attendants. And it all happened in this manner. About three months after the episode just mentioned word came that a woman preacher was coming to the town to hold a protracted meeting. When Gabe heard this news he vowed up and down that no woman would hold any meeting there.

Two or three days later Gabe was out on the range rounding up some cattle. He was charging across the prairie after a refractory steer, when his horse stepped into a prairie dog hole, pitched over on his head, rolled Gabe off and fell on top of him, fracturing a leg and severely spraining his back.

It was impossible to give the injured man proper attention at the ranch, so he was conveyed to town and located in a room at a little hotel. Now at this hotel there was a lady boarder who had come only the day before. She was not exactly young and pretty, yet there was a wholesome freshness and an expression of goodness about her that made her very attractive. This lady took a great interest in Gabe from the moment when she first saw him, and when she found that he had no one to nurse him she went to the doctor and offered her services. The doctor shook his head and hesitated.

"The man needs a woman's care," he admitted, "but he's not worthy of it. He is a terrible character."

"In what way?" she asked.

"He is a tough. He swears, drinks, gambles, fights."

The doctor went on to give a brief account of Gabe's life or deviltry. The woman, instead of being frightened from her purpose, was all the more confirmed in it.

"If he is that," she said, "there is the more need of throwing kind influences about him. His soul is as precious as any soul on earth, and it is a Christian duty to reclaim it if possible."

From that day she visited Gabe, bringing him dainty little morsels of food and performing many small offices to add to his comfort. She always brought a smiling face into the room, and she was unsparing with kind, consoling words.

At first Gabe resented the woman's visits, and she got little from him except dark scowls and a few mumbled words in reply to her questions. She took no notice of his ungracious conduct, or at least appeared not to, and continued to treat him with the same uniform consideration.

After a while her kindness began to tell on him, and she saw it, though he tried to keep it secret. She saw that his face brightened when she came into the room, and that he listened eagerly to her words, however much he pretended not to.

At last there came a time when Gabe could mask his real feelings no longer, and in his rough, brusque way he poured out his gratitude to his nurse. She blushed and smiled and said it afforded her the greatest pleasure to learn that she had been a help and comfort to him.

"I have often wondered," he said, "who and what you are. Won't you tell me?"

"I am afraid I should lose your esteem if I did that," she replied.

"Why?"

"I belong to a class of people that you don't like, so I have heard."

"I don't care what you belong to, you are an angel, and I will never think less of you than I do now."

"Then I'll tell you. I am a preacher."

Gabe was staggered for a moment, then he rallied to his promise and kept it. More than that, when he was able, he attended the protracted meetings the woman was conducting. Attended because she asked him.

The result over it all was that he got religious and fell in love, or perhaps it would be more proper to say that he fell in love first and that led to the other. The curious thing was the preacher loved him and married him, and that he became her helpmeet in her ministerial work.—Utica Globe.

The Force of a Word.

She was a maiden
Of Boston's elect,
Exceedingly homely,
But very correct;
Visiting auntie,
While in New York
Tried to improve on Everyone's talk.

He was a chappie,
Plenty of money,
Often by accident
Said something funny;
"What's that you said?
Hated the shopping?
Oh, by the way,
Where are you stopping?"

A sneer on her face,
A look of disgust;
"I'm staying with auntie,
Not stopping, I trust;
Pray, what could I stop?
The meaning you hide."
"Perhaps I was thinking
"Of clocks," he replied.

—From a Book of Columbia Verse.

Character from Wallets.

An observing young man with a Sherlock Holmes touch in his moral make up says that the age and character of a woman may general be determined by the contents of her pocketbook. The business woman always has a number of receipted bills and a quantity of cash in her pocketbook. The mother of a family usually has many unreceipted bills, little cash and the sides bursting with samples and bargain advertisements while the average young lady has a favorite poem stowed away in a corner and invariably a souvenir of something bordering on the superstitious.

Last year Italy exported 21,000 antique and modern works of art, valued at $600,000. More than half of them went to Germany.

The Dog in the Bible.

The dog is mentioned thirty-three times in the Bible.

A headstrong man is as apt to be wrong as he is right.

When sick, the best thing you can take is a rest.

FOIBLES OF RICH PEOPLE.

Some Think It Degrading to Ride in Common Street Cars.

"That one-half of the inhabitants of New York has no conception of the manner in which the other half exists goes without saying," remarked a society woman recently, "but I never realized how differently the lives, habits and occupations of the rich of our own differ from those of 'nous outres,' who are only moderately well off, until the other day, at a sort of drawing-room debating club that we started this winter the various methods of transit were under discussion, when Mrs. Midas, who was my neighbor, said to me:

"'I cannot speak from experience in any of the matters, for I have never been in a public conveyance in my life, except, of course, the railroads.'

"'Do you mean to say,' I exclaimed, for I could not realize that a woman of 50 years of age, living in New York all her days, could, whatever might be her condition, really live so far apart from the great mass of her fellow creatures, 'that you have never been in an omnibus or a street car?'

"'Never,' she answered.

"'But the elevated railroads,' I persisted. 'What do you do when you wish to go a long distance?'

"'I drive,' she replied, looking mildly astonished. 'Surely you do not climb those stairs and go into those awful things?'

"No wonder that these people feel as if they were made of different clay from the rest of humanity. No aristocrat in Europe could hold herself more proudly aloof from the hoi polloi than do such women who by the power of money and the money alone are thus alienated from their kind. Such class distinctions between those who have and those who have not, based upon nothing but sordid considerations, are undoubtedly widening the breach between the rich and the poor in this country."

"They mean well, these rich women," said a hard-working philanthropist who had devoted years to the people and their needs, not merely bodily, but socially and intellectually. "And we greatly need the money that they give, but I do wish they would not drive down to our clubs with their carriages and footmen. I do not like to say that it was inappropriate and tended to destroy rather than foster the feeling of friendship and self-respect that we are trying to have established, but I tried to suggest to Mrs. Croesus, who has taken so much interest and donated such a large sum to our library, that it would save her so much time if she came down in the 'L.'

"'My dear Mr. T.,' she exclaimed, 'I would not go into one of those slums for the world without John and Thomas to protect me,' a remark which showed how hopelessly ignorant she was of the real meaning and scope of our work."—New York Tribune.

Will Say "Madam."

Henceforth the employes of an Eastern railroad company who have occasion to address women patrons of the road will use the word "Madam," instead of "Lady," a change that educated persons will appreciate, whatever the reasons that dictated it. One of the company said by way of explanation: "It has become a growing and very noticeable evil—among the conductors particularly—of late that women patrons of the road were addressed as 'Mrs.,' sometimes as 'Miss,' not infrequently as 'Lady,' and occasionally as 'Madam,' and it was often the case that the person addressed as 'Mrs.' should have been addressed as 'Miss,' if strict propriety were observed, and vice versa, and individual complaints of such cases have been reported. By the adoption of a uniform greeting, such as 'Madam,' it relieves the conductor and motorman of the responsibility of distinguishing between 'Mrs.' and 'Miss,' and at the same time prevents any possible offense being given."

Make a Fly Look Twelve Miles Long.

Prof. Elmer Gates, of Washington, says he has worked out a process by which objects can be magnified to a size 500 times greater than by any of the microscopes now in use. His invention, he claims, will revolutionize microscopy, and will advance science to a point hitherto unheard of. His discovery, he says, will be of special value in bacteriology and the study of the cellular tissues. The professor declares that he has succeeded where all other scientists have failed—in discovering a way by which the magnified image projected on a lense can be magnified by a second as if it were the original object. To do this has been the aim of scientific photographers and microscopists for many years. Prof. Gates does not take the public into his confidence sufficiently to divulge the details of his invention, but he says he will be ready to give it to the world in a few weeks. The power of the new instrument is mentioned as 3,000,000 diameters.—Washington dispatch to Indianapolis Journal.

Blind People.

So far as the most recent statistics go, the known proportion of blind people is about one in fifteen hundred, which would give a total of one million blind in the world. The largest proportion is found in Russia, which has in Europe 200,000 blind in a population of 96 millions, or one in 480. Most of these are found in the northern provinces of Finland, and the principal cause is ophthalmia, due to the bad ventilation of the huts of the peasantry and the inadequate facilities for treatment. There is a great deal of blindness in Egypt due to blowing sand.

It Was Successful.

"Ah, doctor; glad to see you. I've been anxious to hear about that operation you were telling me of the other day. How did it come out?"

"Oh, beautifully! It was one of the best bits of work I ever did. Very successful in every way."

"And the patient—how did he stand it?"

"Well, he died."—Cleveland Leader.

Effects of a Bee Sting.

An English physician relates an instance of a lady who was stung by a bee. At the first moment she seemed to pay very little attention to it, but very soon her face became flushed and spots appeared all over her body. Suddenly she developed a most severe attack of asthma, finding great difficulty in breathing. Another instance is that of a young lady who was stung on the back of her head by an ordinary honeybee. In less than five minutes her face began to swell, and very marked red and white spots appeared all over the surface of the body. The swelling extended over the entire person, accompanied by severe pain, burning and giddiness. The eyes were almost closed and the countenance was so distorted as to be unrecognizable. Very free bathing in soda water, with a little soda taken internally, and hot applications to the feet and thorough massage finally afforded relief, but it was some hours before the patient recovered from what was truly an alarming condition. Violent attacks of nervousness accompanied the trouble, and the sense of suffocation was almost intolerable. The young woman had been stung a number of times before without any apparent unpleasant result. The physicians were of the opinion that the bee had been feeding upon some extremely poisonous plant, which became concentrated in the venom of the sting. Be that as it may, the condition was such as to excite grave apprehension, the more so as it was several days before recovery was complete.—New York Ledger.

A Wonderful Statement

From Mrs. J. S. McGillas, of 113 Kilburn Avenue, Rockford, Ill.

"I was dreadfully ill—the doctors said they could cure me, but failed to do so.

"I gave up in despair and took to my bed. I had dreadful pains in my heart, fainting spells, sparks before my eyes, and sometimes I would get so blind I could not see for several minutes. I could not stand very long without feeling sick and vomiting.

I also had female weakness, inflammation of ovaries, painful menstruation, displacement of the womb, itching of the external parts, and ulceration of the womb. I have had all these complaints.

"The pains I had to stand were something dreadful. My husband told me to try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine, which I did, and after taking it for a while, was cured."

A GOOD SAMARITAN.

Lay him away,
It matters not where;
Dig a hole in the ground
And deposit him there;
'Twill be useless to raise
A shaft o'er his head,
For heaven's aware
Of the fact that he's dead!

Lowly his lot,
And humble his sphere,
The world—the big, busy world knew not
That he ever was sent to minister here;
He gathered no millions, he built up no trusts—
Cornered no markets, robbed no one of bread;
His raiment was ragged, he lived upon crusts—
But heaven's aware of the fact that he's dead!

Did he worship in church
In the orthodox way?
Did the rafters ring when
It was his turn to pray?
Alas, I know not—
But let it be said
That heaven's aware
Of the fact that he's dead!

The orphan he fanned
Through feverish days
May live or may not
To cherish his praise;
The sick that he nourished when stricken himself,
The starving that, when he was hungry, he fed,
May pray for him now, or may not, as they list—
But heaven's aware of the fact that he's dead!

Lay him away,
It matters not where;
Dig a hole in the earth
And deposit him there;
When the last trumpet sounds
He will hear, he will hear
As well as the man
O'er whose head people rear
The highest of columns—
Aye, put him to bed!
If there is a God He will not forget
That this lowly man lived—and is dead!

ON THE CARDS.

"CAN you tell fortunes?" she asked, leaning her elbows on the table and shuffling the cards. "Some people's. Shall I try your mother's?" Her mother was dozing in the armchair by the fire.

"Oh, don't be silly! Mum's fortune is told."

"Poor mamma!"

"Well, you know what I mean—all that's worth telling. She refused the fair man and married the dark one; wasn't very rich and wasn't very poor—quite poor enough!" She shrugged her shoulders and made a dainty grimace—alas! unnamable. "Had two tiresome boys and one very nice girl—voila mo!"

"Who was an incorrigible little flirt and tease," I suggested bitterly.

"Fortunes don't go into such details about secondary persons, even if they happened to be true, which they aren't."

"Oh, yes, they do."

"Since you know so much about it, you can tell mine." She scattered the cards toward me with a crash. "It's all right, mum; I'm only throwing the cards at Cousin Harry." Her mother gave a sleepy smile, and returned to her slumbers.

"You mustn't blame me if the cards are unfavorable."

"I shall know you've made it up if they are."

"I wouldn't dream of jesting upon such a subject," I assured her. "Fortune-telling follows certain essential principles, which are immutable and——"

"Should be practiced, not preached. Go on."

"To start with, then, you are the Queen of Hearts."

"Why?"

"Because the Queen of Hearts represents feminine beauty and charm."

"Oh!" she leaned back and laughed. "If you are only going to flatter me I won't listen."

"I merely state a fact. You are the Queen of Hearts."

"No, I'm not. I'm spades or clubs, because I'm dark."

"Excuse me, it is not a matter merely of complexion, but of general appearance. Spades represent plain people, diamonds passable people, and hearts very nice-looking people. Therefore you are the Queen of Hearts."

"Lots of people wouldn't consider me good-looking at all." Her tone invited contradiction.

"Very likely not." She flashed an indignant glance at me. "But the fortune-teller is the sole judge on these occasions."

"I'm glad the fortune-teller is so appreciative. Of course, I know you're only pretending." She looked at me for denial, but I busied myself with the cards. "Go on!" she cried.

"First, I shuffle the cards—so. Then I cut them—so. Now I place my hand on them—so. You place your hand on top of mine." She did. "Now I place my other hand on top of yours—so—and you put your other hand on top of mine."

"I never heard of this before," said she, doubtfully. Neither did I, but it had occurred to me as an improvement.

"Now you must sit quite still and silent for a full minute."

"I know I shall laugh."

"Then the fortune will be spoiled."

"I don't believe it's necessary."

"Yes, it is—to place the teller and the tellee en rapport."

"But we aren't, you know. We always quarrel—at least, you do."

"Couldn't we be, just for a minute, Milly?" I didn't mean to speak seriously, but I did.

She nodded gravely, and I sat looking at and watching the pink color steal over her pretty face. I think it must have been two minutes that we sat like that, during which I forgave her all her little wickedness.

"There!" said I, reluctantly. "Now for the fortune. Cut the cards, Milly. The fortune must be your own making."

"You have made me feel quite serious," said she with a nervous little laugh.

"It is going to be a serious fortune," I meant it to be.

"Then—then won't you cut, too, Harry? To represent other people? I don't like all the responsibility. Please!" So I cut, too. It didn't matter, you see, because I looked at the cards before I put them down in the shape of an opened fan round the Queen of Hearts. Of course, I don't know anything about fortune-telling, really.

"The disposition of the cards," I said gravely, "indicates many possibilities of happiness and good fortune, if you take your opportunities; but much is left to your own decision."

"What a nuisance! Don't they say how I shall decide?" I shook my head.

"The hearts near the queen show that you are and will be much liked and admired."

"I believe you're making it up."

"The three kings next to her indicate three admirers—perhaps lovers."

"Whoever can they be?"

"The King of Clubs, with the other clubs close by, I take to be a soldier—good-looking, dashing, and, from the diamonds in the same line, not badly off. The hearts at the end of the line denote that you have given him some encouragement."

"I'm sure I haven't," said she, with some warmth. Of course, she knew I meant Capt. Richards. "The cards are wrong."

"Perhaps they mean that you will do so," I suggested, inquiringly; but she twisted up her handkerchief and made no answer.

"The King of Diamonds, with spades following, means an elderly suitor who has prospered in trade. He is shown by the diamonds, ending with the knave, to have made a fortune and retired, handing over the business to his son." I meant old Parsley.

"I call it very unkind of you, Harry." Her lip dropped a little, and I hastened to apologize.

"It isn't my doing. It's the cards."

"Well, you know it isn't true. It's only"—she looked over her shoulder to see that her mother was still asleep—"mamma's silliness. Why, he's as old as dad; and I wouldn't. You know I wouldn't."

"The cards leave it to you, Milly."

"Don't you believe me?" She looked quite hurt.

"Of course—if you say so." I patted her hand, which was lying on the table, but she drew it sharply away and rubbed the touch off with her handkerchief.

"Well? The King of Hearts? What does that mean?"

I considered a moment. "The King of Hearts," I pronounced slowly, "means a handsome young fellow who paid you a great deal of attention when you were staying with the Queen of Clubs, a dark relative—probably your aunt."

"I won't listen to another word!" she cried, indignantly. "It's a nasty, horrid fortune, and quite untrue. There!"

"Very well." I made as if I would sweep the cards together.

"Don't be disagreeable." She looked at me reproachfully, with one of her kaleidoscopic changes. "I want to hear it—my proper fortune—not nonsense."

"Well, isn't this true?"

"No, it isn't."

"Didn't he pay you a lot of attention?"

"Young Jephson?"

"Yes." He was the rival I really feared."

"Nothing special."

"So many pay you attention that you think nothing of it."

"You silly fellow!" said she, scornfully. "Why, he's almost engaged to cousin Annie." I felt as though a weight was taken off me.

"Why," I said, "how stupid of me! She must be the dark lady, I suppose. I ought to have connected him with her instead of with you."

"I don't believe you understand the fortune business a bit."

"It's very difficult," I apologized. "But you see the cards are all right, when you read them properly."

"What else do they say?"

"The next point is money. The seven of diamonds, next to the knave of clubs—probably your uncle—indicates a legacy; and——"

"No, no!" she interrupted. "I don't want to know about money."

"Well, the duration of life is shown by——"

"That doesn't matter," said she quickly, shrugging her shoulders.

"Then I hardly know what else there is to tell." I looked at her doubtfully. There was one thing only that I wanted to tell her. "What do you want to know, Milly?"

She put her elbow on the table and rested her head on her hand. Then she laughed uneasily, and I held my breath for a moment.

"Isn't there—I mean did you finish with—the—the—admirers, as you call them?"

"There is another," I told her, "but he is hardly worth mentioning."

"Why not? Because he doesn't care for—dosen't admire, or whatever you call it—much?"

"Oh, no! But he's poor, you see. Being only the King of Spades, he has to work for a living, so he admires at a distance. There are two cards between him and her, you see."

"But," said she very gently, "they are hearts."

"Yes," said I, "they are hearts; being two, they show that he is distantly related." We are second cousins really.

"They indicate that he is very fond of her, but leave it doubtful if she is more than slightly attracted to him." I looked appealingly to her, but her eyes were cast down.

"How do you make that out?" she asked at length.

"The card next to her is the two; but that by him is the ten, which means great affection."

"What does the rest of the line mean?"

"The nine of spades, on the other hand of the king, shows that he has a great deal more work to do before he can be in a position to ask the knave of hearts—her father—for her hand. Meanwhile the eight of spades and the ace of clubs show that he must toil at some risk in a land across the sea."

She clasped her hands suddenly and looked up.

"Oh, no, no!" she cried.

"Yes," I said quietly and sadly.

"Where?" Her dainty mouth was quivering.

"The cards do not say. But it is the Cape, I believe, where a relative has offered him a good berth."

We looked at the cards in dismal silence for a while. Then she smiled at me ever so brightly.

"There is the ace of hearts at the end of the line, Henry," she whispered. "What does that mean?"

I took the hand near me gently in mine. "I think, Milly," I said earnestly, "it must be my heart because it is over by you. Will you have it, dear?"

She looked down for a moment, then pushed it gently toward me. "I think," she said, "it must be my heart—which is going over the sea with you."—Black and White.

PUZZLED THE SAVANTS.

Wise Men of Washington Were Filled with Alarm.

In one of the many glass cases in the Smithsonian Institution at Washington is a stuffed owl. This particular owl is the one, in the words of the late President Hayes, "that jarred the Washington monument," and therein lies the story.

During centennial year Congress resolved to provide the necessary funds for the completion of the monument, which up to that time had been worked at only while the several smaller appropriations lasted. It was discovered, however, that the original foundation was likely to be incapable of sustaining the enormous weight of marble necessary for carrying the shaft 550 feet above terra firma. A new foundation was therefore needed, and architects thought a solid concrete bed 100 feet square and nearly 14 feet in thickness would accomplish the strengthening desired.

During the operation of replacing the old foundation it was considered expedient to provide means for noting carefully the slightest vibration of the walls lest the monument might be in danger of collapsing. Accordingly a heavy weight was suspended by a stout thread from the apex to a pan of thick syrup located on the base, so that no chance draught of air would be likely to sway the weight. An ingenious contrivance was so attached to the weight that the slightest vibration of the shaft would be faithfully recorded, and its insecurity would at once be an established fact.

One morning a few months after these careful precautions had been taken there was a great commotion among the workmen. A complete record of numerous perturbations and tremblings had ben written on the index, showing conclusively that the mammoth obelisk had jarred, swayed and settled during the night. Scientific heads were dubiously shaken.

After much persuasion one of the men finally consented to go to the top and examine into the cause. The astonishing report into the midst of the anxious throng below that an owl in seeking shelter in the lofty tower had somewhat managed to catch its wings in the thread and was still hanging there, suspended to the interior of the monument, and innumerable flappings and struggles of his owlship had all been recorded by the index as testimony against the stability of plumb-laid marble blocks and solid concrete.

Peculiar Custom in Norway.

Some friends who have just returned from a tour in out-of-the-way parts of Norway tell me of a capital hotel system in vogue there which might be adopted with advantage in some parts of Scotland and Ireland. In every village where no hotel exists some one of the more prominent inhabitants is subsidized by the Norwegian Government, and in return is bound to provide accommodation for not less than four travelers; he may take in more if he chooses, but four is the minimum. My friends made frequent use of these subsidized hostelries and are enthusiastic concerning the excellence of the accommodation and food supplied. I did not gather whether the tariff was regulated by Government, but I presume it is; anyway, the charges are absurdly moderate. Norway owes much of her prosperity to tourists, and she certainly treats them well.—London Sketch.

Blind Girl Gardener.

A blind girl owning a few acres of land in Oak Hill, Texas, is said to be making a living by the sale of vegetables. She has cleared about $200 each season in this way, besides improving her land. She does most all of her own work, and her highly developed senses of hearing and of touch seem to make up for her want of sight.

The Kindness of Death.

THE old worn theory that death is man's bitterest foe, is not true. Plato called death a "gain," and asked: "What greater blessing can there be than this, ye judges?" Death can be both cruel and kind. Cruel, to those of us who are left behind, when one by one the old familiar faces pass from our sight; kind, to those who are led by its gentle hand to the larger fellowships of the sacred and the unseen. Tears by the grave should be for the living, not for the dead. The living have burdens yet to bear, and many a bitter draught to quaff from life's mingled chalice. But the dead have done with toil and care and tears. No angry noises will any more disturb their peace, no strife of tongues will break their calm repose. The bitterness of scandal may wage its cruel wicked war, but they will not hear; for the grave is as deaf as it is dumb. Half a century before the great Nazarene spoke to his Galilean disciples of life and death, and the life to come; Aeschylus told his Athenian friends that death was not a foe but a "Savior!" And he further added: "Thou alone art the physician of incurable woes; no sorrow reaches the dead!" Through ages the same great truth has clung to Grecian thought: "Call no man happy until he is dead." Death is cruel and death is kind. But its kindness is to those it takes, its cruelty to those it leaves behind.—Camoens.

Confidence in God.

Come weal or woe, come joy or pain,
Come days of light or days of rain,
My Lord is good and kind,
Come smiles or disappointment's frown,
Come loss or gain, come cross or crown,
I shall a blessing find.

Whate'er may come, whate'er may be,
Whate'er may fail from God on me,
He is my Father still.
Whate'er His wisdom may assign,
Whate'er He sends, He is benign,
And gracious is His will.

Though He should slay me, I will trust;
Though tempted Him to call unjust,
My faith shall never fail;
Though numerous foes should on me rise,
Though death should come in darkest guise,
O'er these I shall prevail.

O Father, Thou art Love in name,
And all Thy ways Thy love proclaim
With more than trumpet sound;
All things that come are good from Thee;
Thy will is like a spreading tree
On which pure fruit is found.
—Philadelphia Ledger.

Duties of the Christian Life.

"The obligations and duties of the Christian life are not all external," writes Cardinal Gibbons, pointing out a religious life to young men, in the Ladies' Home Journal. "They are mainly material, and must proceed from the heart. There is no virtue in one's daily actions unless it be first established in the soul, and is only an external expression of the soul's convictions or prolongation of heartfelt sentiments. Yet the external practice of Christian virtues, and the performance of Christian duties, pertain to the integrity, if not to the essential character, of the Christian life. The interior sentiments soon perish without external expression, as life and bodily powers become extinct without due and proper exercise or employment.

"However, as the external duties are not absolutely, and under all circumstances, essential, they vary both in number and frequency, according to environments and opportunities. A business man cannot do all that a clergy man is expected to do; a man in trade not what a man in leisure can accomplish; nor a man of the world all that is possible and easy to one who keeps himself from society. But all, no matter where, no matter what their engagements and secular pursuits, how little or how much time they can call their own, can and are obliged to perform daily acts of prayer and religion, and accomplish many duties of virtue and charity. There is no condition of life which is incompatible with the dictates, and principles, and precepts of the Christian life."

A Poor Man's Gift.

Early in the year 1897 the American Baptist Missionary Union found itself heavily in arrears. During the remarkable and successful movement to raise the needed money individuals made many touching sacrifices, the story of which would recall the zeal of the Israelite women when Moses built the tabernacle. The poorest seemed to have something to give. There was one man who thought he had nothing.

He was a venerable clergyman long past his days of labor, an inmate of an Aged People's Home. The best of his life had been given to religious work, and he longed to do a little to help pay the debt of the burdened society.

One day the Rev. E. F. Merriam, who relates this incident in the Missionary Magazine, received from him a slip of paper containing a written name, with the accompanying hope that the sale of it might bring a small sum of money in aid of the cause. It was an autograph of Adoniram Judson, the first missionary from this country to India. The aged minister had received it while a student at Waterville College, during the visit of the great missionary to America, and he kept it as a precious relic fifty-one years.

Mr. Merriam put it into the hands of Dr. Seymour, of Philadelphia, relating the circumstances, and at the anniversary meeting of the Missionary Union, Doctor Seymour offered it and feelingly told its story. Twenty-five dollars were bid for it immediately, and once started the bids went up "by leaps and bounds" until the precious signature was sold for three hundred dollars—adding so much to the redemption fund.

Not long ago an article was printed by an exchange, stating the respective values of the sign manuals of the presidents. Affectionate patriotism will pay seventy-five dollars for the hand-writing of Lincoln. Christian enthusiasm will pay higher still for the handwriting of the apostle who opened an East Indian province to the religion of the Man of Nazareth. Judson's signature was worth to its purchaser all that it cost him—and it was the gift of one poor man.

There is an added beauty to the story in the example it gives of the productive virtue of a great and good man's name. In the possession of a rich collector the autograph of Doctor Judson might have remained a mere curio. The poor man's hand and heart made it a benefaction. And it was most fitting that the great missionary's name should help the cause he loved, and for which he died.

Rev. Frank Crane's Epigrams.

God wants obedience, not obelsance.

The man who runs away from God has a long way to go.

A religious sinner is worse than a wicked sinner.

Some men are Christians in only the same sense they are Americans or Caucasians.

The religious question is not whether you are going to heaven, but whether you are doing your best to make a heaven here.

When one will not rise to a principle he tries to bend the principle down to him.

We need also to pray, "Forgive us our righteousness," for it is the so-called righteousness of mankind that killed Jesus and yet obstructs Him.

No amount of politeness, education or religiosity can keep a selfish heart utterly concealed; you cannot carry assafoetida in your inside pocket and not be found out.

It is better to flee from the temple than to pollute it.

It is not so easy to explain religion as to explain it away.

Evil is never dangerous until it seems to be good.

A corporation is a contrivance by which to get profits and escape responsibility.

If traditional theology be true the directors in some corporations will have to spend the week days in hell and the Sundays with their family in heaven.

The commercial conscience is the modernized Tetzelism.

The open sinner is only an alien from God; the hypocrite is God's enemy.

"A Little Harder."

Those of us who are inclined to give up to discouragement when things go wrong, might learn a helpful lesson from a young woman who had left home because her father was a drunkard. When she became a Christian, however, she announced her intention of returning, and doing what she could to reclaim him.

"But what will you do when he finds fault with all your efforts to please him?" some one asked her.

"Try a little harder," she answered, with a soft light in her eyes.

"Yes, but when he is unreasonable and unkind you will be tempted to lose your temper, and answer him angrily. What will you do then?"

"Pray a little harder," came the answer with a fearless ring in the words.

The discourager had one more arrow in his quiver.

"Suppose he should strike you, as he did before. What could you do but leave again?"

"Love him a little harder," said the young Christian, steadily.

It is pleasant to add that her splendid faith conquered. Through love and prayer and patient effort, her father was not only reclaimed from his besetting sin, but proved Christ's power to save to the uttermost all that come unto him.—Ram's Horn.

Thankfulness to Man.

We should be grateful to man as well as to God. Life's pathway is made brighter by the giving and receiving of kindness, sympathy and love. In the home life every day ministries of loved ones should be received by spoken gratitude. We are prone to take things too much as a matter of course in our home circles. We receive in silence from loved ones kindnesses which if received from strangers we would promptly acknowledge with thanks. Many a mother's heart would be brightened if children showed their gratitude. In our church life there is many an occasion for an "I thank you." The pastor's heart would be cheered if after the sermon that has helped you, you would tell him so. Gratitude is a grace that adorns its wearer, and should never be absent from a Christian's apparel.

The Path to God.

The path to God leads through the hearts of men, is a formula that may be used on account for the direction of the present activities of the church. Primarily the object of church life is to find God, and the church has sought him in the heavens above, in mysticism, in theology, in philosophy, and it has found evidence of God, but not God. But along this rediscovered path of Jesus, obscured and obstructed with the entangling thoughts of the centuries, the church is now stumbling with ever firmer and more confident step towards the Heavenly Father.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES

The graphophone is being utilized by the bureau of ethnology to preserve a record of songs and languages that are likely to soon become extinct.

Tristan d'Acunha's yearly mail has been dispatched from St. Helena. It consists of ten letters, three newspapers and two packages of books.

Five is the sacred number of the Chinese, who have five planets, five cardinal points, five virtues, five tastes, five musical tones, five ranks of nobility and five colors.

A shoe dealer in New York says that on account of the newspaper ridicule women have almost entirely discontinued the practice of sending slippers to their pastors at Christmas.

Twenty-two business men who acted as the coroner's jury in the investigation of the recent great fire in London and served for fourteen working days received 4 pence (8 cents) each as compensation.

The Delaware and Hudson Railroad has adopted a competitive system in dealing with employes, with the view of enhancing efficiency, eliminating favoritism and making merit the reason for promotion.

Women in France have just secured a slight addition to their legal rights. They may henceforth be valid witnesses to registrations of births, marriages and deaths, and to the signatures in legal documents.

A paper read before the British association at Bath in praise of corsets, declared that "reasonably tight" lacing increased mental and physicial activity by causing a more liberal supply of blood to the brain, muscles and nerves.

A European has been sentenced at Buluwayo to six years' imprisonment with hard labor for defrauding the natives of their cattle. He pretended to be a Government inspector and seized the cattle for supposed violations of law.

Two glasses of a temperance drink served to a London doctor by a tectotal family contained so much alcohol that the doctor was unable to walk straight across the room. He is now lecturing against ginger ale and root beer as intoxicants.

The women of Seattle, Wash., have instituted a Society of Klondike Widows. The lists are exclusive, being restricted to those whose claims to "Klondike widowhood" are indisputable. Only the wives and sweethearts of men off to the gold fields are eligible and no others need apply.

"The Deacon's One-Hoss Shay" has been outdone by the colonel's "one-hoss" sleigh. A sleigh made by Col. David Moseley in 1776 has been in the family service ever since. It is now owned by Edward Moseley of Westfield, Mass., a great-grandson. It is a low-backed affair and a "hansum critter" even now.

A German professor has discovered that Freiherr Bernard von Parravicini of Schloss Rundeck, near Meran, in Tyrol, married for the fourth time at the age of 82 years, lived to be 104, and had seven children, of whom the last was posthumous. His eldest daughter was 80 years of age at her father's death.

Grand opera in Paris, according to official accounts, has been given at an expenditure over receipts of 4,500,000 francs in five years, an average loss, that is, of $180,000 a year. The subvention of 800,000 francs a year reduces the annual deficit to $20,000, but there is a further yearly deficit of $30,000 on the opera concerts.

An immense meteor, followed by a shower of meteoric stones, fell near the big sand butte about twenty miles southeast of Dubolse, Idaho. The concussion was so great that it caused a perceptible vibration of the earth which was distinctly felt within a radius of twenty miles, and was at first supposed to be an earthquake.

In the Diesel gas engine, which is now attracting much attention in Germany, the mixture of air and gas which moves the piston is not suddenly exploded when it takes fire, but burns slowly enough to impart a more gradual impulse to the engine. A 1,000 horse power motor of this type is promised for the Paris exposition of 1900.

A new lion of St. Mark, with his paw on the open gospel, and the doge kneeling in prayer by his side, is being put in the middle gallery on the west side of the doge's palace in Venice, the place formerly held by Doge Gritti's lion, set up in 1538. This was torn down when the republic fell 100 years ago and its place has been empty till now.

A new civil code will go into effect in the German empire in 1900. Its provisions are to stand as the permanent law of the empire. One of these provisions is that any man who, through addiction to drink, is unable to provide for himself or his family, and who imperils the safety of others, shall be excluded from the ordinary rights and privileges of citizenship.

The value of antiseptic methods of surgery has been demonstrated by Prof. Kober of the Georgetown University, who points out that during the Crimean war more than one-half (63.5 per cent.) of the amputations that were performed resulted in death. In the American civil war the mortality from amputation was still 48.1 per cent., but in 1890 the statistics of amputation showed that the mortality had been reduced to 6.9 per cent.

Not Always Deadly.

Just what it is that induces poison ivy to play its injurious pranks on some people at some times and not at others is still a profound mystery. One thing is certain, that the poisoning instances must be extremely scarce, from the fact that in the vicinity of Philadelphia the highways and byways are overrun with the plant to an enormous extent. It is frequently impossible for people to go by without brushing against it, and, if it is the vapor or some exudation from the plant which causes the trouble, thousands of persons must be under the influence to every one who suffers from it.

The writer of this paragraph knows of a tract of land on which the plant grows profusely, and on which many scores of laborers are employed. These laborers are frequently set to weeding and pulling out the plant by the naked hand, and, so far as the writer knows, none of these men was ever poisoned by it. The cattle eat it greedily whenever they get an opportunity. It seems to have no injurious influence on them. Yet it is well known that numbers of persons do suffer seriously from it, and it is this peculiar feature which gives to the poison ivy a special interest.—Meehan's Monthly.

FINDS THE GERM OF CANCER.

Startling Discovery Said to Have Been Made by a Frenchman.

Once more a French physician has come forward with a discovery which has startled the medical and scientific world and which, if his claims prove true, may lead to new methods in the cure and prevention of that most horrible of human ailments, cancer. It is generally admitted by physicians that the primary cause of cancer is unknown. It has always been a mystery. The growths developed in certain people from no known causes and the only advance made by savants in the study of the disease was in improved methods of treating it.

Now Dr. Leon Noel declares he has discovered the germ of cancer and that it comes from vegetation, from trees and underbrush. He says he has inoculated animals with the germs found in the sap of certain trees and that all the symptoms of cancer are produced. The physician who makes these startling statements is not a man of years of experience. He has but recently received his diploma and his ideas regarding cancer were first made public in the thesis which he wrote for submission to the Government experts before he might receive the paper allowing him to practice medicine, as the French law provides. As soon as his theories were made known he became famous, and now all the doctors of France are talking of him and his idea.

Dr. Noel says the presence of cancer in the human race is due to infection, the germs being received either by manual contact or by absorption in food or drink. He discovered some years ago that cancer was much more prevalent among residents of thickly wooded sections of the country and was almost unknown in cities and on high plateaus. Then he began experimenting with the sap of various trees and finally discovered the germ with which he inoculated a dog. The animal soon showed every symptom of cancer. The doctor also claims the bollike growths or excrescenses found on the limbs of trees are infectious and that the germs of cancer and other diseases may be carried by wasps and other insects to the body of a human being.

The novel theory is receiving deep thought and attention in France and it may yet be possible to vaccinate for cancer.—Chicago Chronicle.

First Silver Wedding.

The fashion of silver weddings dates back to the reign of Hugues Capet, king of France in 987, says Vogue.

Once as Hugues was arranging his uncle's affairs he found on one of the estates a servant who had grown gray in the service of his relative. He had been such a friend of his master's that he was almost looked upon as one of the family.

On the farm with this old man was also a serving woman who was as old as he, and also unmarried, and who had been the most devoted and hard-working of the women servants of the king's uncle. When the king heard of these praises of the two, he ordered them to be brought before him, and said to the woman:

"Your service is great, greater than this man's, whose services were great enough, for the woman always finds work and obedience harder than a man, and therefore I will give you a reward. At your age I know of none better than a dowry and a husband. The dowry is here—this farm from this time forth belongs to you. If this man who has worked with you five-and-twenty years, is willing to marry you, then the husband is ready.'

"Your Majesty," stuttered the old peasant, confusedly, "how is it possible that we should marry, having already silver hairs?"

"Then it shall be a silver wedding," answered the king, "and here I give you a wedding ring," drawing a costly ring from his finger, and placing the hands of the thankful old people together.

This soon became known all over France, and raised such enthusiasm that it became a fashion after a twenty-five years' marriage to celebrate a silver wedding.

He Was Not a Great Eater.

The matter of fixing rates of toll on Deep Spring Valley Toll road was laid over till the next regular meeting.

In the matter of the issuance of bonds of Big Pine School District of Inyo County, State of California.

Whereas, it appears to this board that the Board of Trustees of Big Pine School District, in the county of Inyo, as authorized by law, hold an election and submit to the electors of said district whereas bonds of said district should be issued and sold for the purpose of raising money for the purchasing school lots and building one or more school houses in said district, and furnishing the same, whereas it appears that such election was called by posting notices signed by said board of trustees in three of the most public places in said district for more than twenty days before said election, and by publishing notice in the Inyo Register, a weekly newspaper published in the said Inyo county not less than once a week for three successive weeks before the holding of said election. Whereas it appears that such notices did contain:

1st. The time and place of holding such election.

2d. The names of three judges to hold said election.

3d. The hours during the day (not less than five) in which the polls would be open.

4th. The amount and denomination of the bonds, the rate of interest and the number of years (not exceeding seven) the whole or any part of said bonds were to run. Whereas it has been proven by competent evidence to the satisfaction of this board that such election was duly held and conducted in all respects according to law, whereas, it appears that said Board of Trustees of said Big Pine School District have certified to this Board all proceedings had in the matter of the issuance of such bonds as required by Section 1884 of the Political Code of California. Whereas, it appears to this board and the board hereby finds and declares, that more than two-thirds of the votes cast at said election was in favor of issuing said bonds, and that said board of Trustees met and canvassed said returns and caused an entry of that fact and the votes cast to be made upon the minutes, and, whereas, it further appears that the whole amount of bonds so voted does not exceed five per cent of the taxable property of the district as shown by the last equalized assessment roll of this county.

Now, therefore, on motion of Supervisor Eldred, seconded by Supervisor Shaw, it is by this board hereby Ordered, that the bond of said Big Pine School district in the county of Inyo, State of California, do issue to the number of six of the denomination of $500 each, aggregating the sum of $3000 All of said bonds are hereby declared to be payable in gold coin of the United States, with interest thereon at the rate of eight per cent. per annum from date until paid, the interest on said bonds to be paid on the 10th day of May of each and every year, the principal and interest of said bonds to be paid out of the bond fund of said Big Pine School District, the money therefor to be raised upon this taxable property of said district.

The principal of this issue shall mature as follows, towit:

One bond for five hundred dollars maturing May 10, 1900; one bond for five hundred dollars maturing annually thereafter until all shall be paid.

The form of said bonds shall be as follows, towit:

United States of America, State of California. Bond of Big Pine School District, Inyo county, California.

Big Pine School District, in the county of Inyo, State of California, for value received hereby promises to pay to..... ..... or to the holder of this bond the sum of Five Hundred Dollars, which sum the said school district promises to pay the holder hereof at the office of the treasurer of said county in the town of Independence, in said county, on the 10th day of May, 1900, with interest thereon at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, payable annually on the 10th day of May of each and every year from and after the date hereof, at the office of the Treasurer aforesaid, on the presentation and surrender of annexed coupons or interest warrants, both principal and interest payable in gold coin of the United States, until this bond be finally and fully paid.

OBITUARY

On Tuesday last a message was sent from San Francisco conveying the sad news that Mrs. Maria Rose had died that afternoon at the French hospital. About two months ago the deceased went to San Francisco to get medical treatment for an aggravated form of stomach trouble. The physicians held several consultations in regard to the course of treatment seemed to benefit the patient until about a week ago, when a turn for the worse occurred, which resulted in death. Mrs. John Morton of Keeler, the daughter of the lady, had started for San Francisco when the news of the death reached her at Hawthorne. The body was embalmed and sent to Independence, where it will arrive on tonight's train. Mrs. Rose was born at New York City in 1852. In 1867 she was married at Benton to James N. Rose and has resided in Inyo county ever since. She leaves four children, three sons and a daughter, all of whom, with the husband, have the sincere sympathy of the community. The husband and one son, George, are at Coso springs for their health. A messenger was sent for them and they are expected to arrive in time for the funeral, which will take place tomorrow at 2 p.m. The body will be interred at the Independence cemetery.

WAR NEWS.

As we go to press the latest news verifies our prediction that hostilities are about to commence. The Spanish have siezed the cable at Havana. Gen. Lee and all Americans in Cuba have fled. All consuls at Spanish ports have been withdrawn. The President's message reached Congress Monday, and is very decisive. It was referred, of course, to the Foreign Relations committee. The House committee reported a resolution declaring war, and it was passed by a vote of 324 to 20. It is now under debate in the Senate and will probably reach a vote this afternoon. Mckinley yesterday notified the Senate that unless they passed the resolution by tonight he would take action himself.

The Los Angeles Review, a new publication devoted to the mining interests, has for several issues past given some excellent illustrated writeups of Inyo county mining districts. It has been liberal with its space, and has displayed a spirit of fairness toward our mines that other papers would do well to emulate.

A WORD OF ADVICE

To Those Coming to Alaska or the Klondike Gold Fields.

One thing should be impresed upon every miner, prospector or trader coming to Alaska, to the Klondike, or the Yukon country, and that is the necessity for providing an adequate and proper food supply. Whether procured in the States, in the Dominion, or at the supply stores here or further on, this must be his primary concern. Upon the manner in which the miner has observed or neglected this precaution more than upon any other one thing will his success or failure depend.

These supplies must be healthful and should be concentrated, but the most careful attention in the selection of foods that will keep unimpaired indefinitely under all the conditions which they will have to encounter is imperative. For instance, as bread raised with baking powder must be relied upon for the chief part of every meal, imagine the helplessness of a miner with a can of spoiled baking powder. Buy only the very best flour; it is the cheapest in the end. Experience has shown the Royal Baking Powder to be the most reliable, and the trading companies now uniformly supply this brand, as others will not keep in this climate. Be sure that the bacon is sweet, sound and thoroughly cured. These are the absolute necessities upon which all must place a chief reliance, and can under no circumstances be neglected. They may, of course, be supplemented by as many comforts or delicacies as the prospector may be able to pack or desire to pay for.—From the Alaska Mining Journal.

A book of recipes for all kinds of cookery, which is specially valuable for use upon the trail or in the camp, is published by the Royal Baking Powder Company, of New York. The receipts are thoroughly practical and the methods are carefully explained, so that the inexperienced may, with its aid, readily prepare everything requisite for a good, wholesome meal, or even dainties if he has the necessary materials. The matter is in compact, though durable, form, the whole book weighing but two ounces. Under a special arrangement, this book will be sent free to miners or others who may desire it. We would recommend that every one going to the Klondike procure a copy. Address the Royal Baking Powder Co., New York.

Carmen Sylva, as Queen Elizabeth of Roumania is known to the literary world, has just received her diploma constituting her a doctor of letters and honorary member of the University of Budapest. The diplomat is a veritable work of art and is inclosed in an artistic case of great intrinsic value. Accompanying it is a letter from the council of the university written in four languages, Hungarian, Wallachian, Latin and French.

THE PACIFIC COAST SYRUP CO.

Reform In Ancient Stuttgart.

The question of the nightly illumination of the old city was always a contested one, and fiercely waged the warfare between the dukes and the town authorities. It was Eberhard Ludwig who finally defied the doughty magistrates and ordered that a number of lanterns should be supplied. The lanterns were provided, but the magistrates would not allow them to be lighted. A hot contest followed between the duke and the chief magistrate. The latter had but one response for all the angry remonstrances of the duke, "When people should be brought into view before the eyes of night thieves, how easy it would be for them to drag their victims to a dark place, plunder and kill them!" Eberhard was obliged to give up his project.

Duke Carl insisted that the streets should be lighted and carried his point, but no sooner had be removed his residence to Ludwigsburg than complete darkness once more nightly settled over the streets of Stuttgart. Iron pillars, to which shallow pans were attached, were stationed at regular intervals along the streets. When, on extraordinary occasions, illumination was allowed, rosin and pitch were lighted in these pans, and the flickering flames only added weirdness to the darkness that they were intended to dissipate.

As late as 1770 lanterns hung in the places designated by Duke Carl, but they burned not. The security of the citizens was above all else.—"Stuttgart," by Elise J. Allen, in Harper's Magazine.

To One He Writes Legibly.

A well known musician, who writes a very illegible hand, once sent an unusually hopeless scrawl to a friend. The latter studied it a minute, gave it up in despair and then sat down and wrote in reply: "I shall be most happy to dine with you tomorrow at 6. Kindest regards to your wife," etc. In less than half an hour his friend appeared breathless at his door.

"There's some misunderstanding," he said anxiously. "I wrote you a note asking you if you could play the piano part of the trio at Brown's recital, and here you've sent me an acceptance of a dinner invitation, but I didn't invite you to dinner."

"Well," returned the other blandly, "I didn't suppose you'd really sent me an invitation to dinner, but I couldn't read a word of your note, and in that case hereafter I mean always to take it for granted that you're asking me to dine."

For one of his correspondents at least the offender now writes legibly.—Chicago News.

An Old Beverage.

Next to our grape wine it is believed that Japanese sake, or rice wine, is the oldest alcoholic beverage known to man, its use in Japan dating back over 2,000 years.

A WEAK SPOT.

A weak spot in a piece of timber may endanger a whole building, and certain it is that the man who suffers with Lumbago lets down the whole framework of his anatomy. In case of the building it is shored up and made strong, and just so St. Jacobs Oil shores up the muscles of the back, strengthens the muscular frame and in a very short time the sufferer is restored to his native strength. Why then will a man go about on crutches for months and years, when the stimulation of a good liniment like St. Jacobs Oil will in so short a time send him back to business and to the bosom of his family a strong and healthy man.

Go to Bed.

The best possible thing for a man to do when he feels too weak to carry anything through is to go to bed and sleep as long as he can, says The Medical Record. This is the only recuperation of brain power, the only actual recuperation of brain force, because during sleep the brain is in a state of rest, in a condition to receive and appropriate particles of nutriment from the blood which take the place of those which have been consumed by previous labor, since the very act of thinking burns up solid particles, as every turn of the wheel or screw of the steamer is the result of consumption by fire of the fuel in the furnace.

THE FAMILY STORY

IT WAS FOR LENKEN.

WHEN Meyer came to Pineville he gave his name as Wilhelm Windmeyer, and it was promptly changed by the citizens to Bill Meyer.

He came direct from the fatherland to make Pineville his home. He thought it was his duty, too, to tell everybody he had left a sweetheart behind, and that it was for her sake that he was working to make a home. Her name was Lenken. She was very beautiful, he said, and so good that it seemed almost a miracle she had lived to the age of 20.

It was this loyalty to the girl he had promised to marry, and who was so far away, that made Meyer a favorite with everybody in Pineville.

But Meyer was a slow, easy going fellow, and the one thought about Lenken seemed to occupy every cranny of his thinking apparatus, to the exclusion of every other thought. He was a very small man, and that, and the wooden leg he wore, he said, had saved him from doing duty as a soldier.

Meyer found employment with Judge Peterkin. The wages were low, but it was a steady job, and that was what Meyer most desired.

During his first year in Pineville Meyer gained a little sum of money, and lost four fingers and part of his nose. He was trying to whistle "Die Wacht am Rhine" down the barrel of an old musket, when the gun went off accidentally and carried away part of his nasal organ. The fingers were cut off with a small circular saw used for cutting firewood.

Two fingers on one hand were cut off first. When the wounded hand had been tied up, Judge Peterkin, his daughter Molly, and Aunt Phyllis, the cook, followed Meyer out to the woodshed to be shown how the accident had occurred.

"It must have been a piece of pure carelessness on your part," said the judge, looking very severe. "Now show me how it was done."

"I vas singing 'Over die garten vall,'" said Meyer. "Den I pick up a shtick of wood like dis," picking one up with his unwounded hand. "Und den I hold it like dis, und den de shtick shlip like dis, und den my fingers vas cut off like dis." And that was how Meyer came to lose the second two fingers.

The second year Meyer laid up another small sum of money, and was divested of part of an ear, two toes and a good deal of his hair. The ear and toes were lost accidentally, and the hair incidentally, from natural causes.

"Why, Meyer, Lenken won't know you when she sees you again, you are such a wreck," said Molly to him one day.

"Vell, maybe so," he sighed. But in a moment the confidence in his sweetheart's steadfastness returned. "Oh, she vas so goot, Miss Molly, und so beautiful," he said, "dat it makes no difference to her how I look. She vas true all de time."

Then Molly thought she would see if Meyer would not pay her a compliment.

"How does Lenken look, Meyer? Does she look something like me?" she asked.

"Like you!" he exclaimed. "Lenken don't look like nobody. Miss Wiggin look like you, maybe, but Lenken vas different."

Miss Wiggin was Molly's rival beauty in Pineville, and the reference to her made the latter flush very red in the face. Meyer laughed merrily.

"You don't look pooty ven you look like dat, Miss Molly," he said.

Then there came changes, and Meyer did not profit any by them. Judge Peterkin died, Miss Molly married, and Meyer had to look out for himself as best he could. True, Molly still interested herself in him as much as possible, but she had new cares and new duties now that claimed her attention most of the time.

But Meyer was always hopeful, and in good humor. His every thought, act and deed was to accomplish something to bring the day nearer when he could write to Lenken and tell her that he had made a home for her. It was all for Lenken.

"How long since you heard from Lenken?" Molly asked him one day.

Meyer thought awhile.

"A little over two years ago," he replied.

"And when did you write to her?"

"Oh, dat vas t'ree years ago."

"Meyer, you ought to be ashamed of yourself," cried Molly. "You must sit down here, right now, and write Lenken a long letter, and tell her that you are still alive. Why, don't you know that she is grieving all the time, and imagining that all sorts of accidents have befallen you?"

"Maybe so. I never t'ink of dat."

"For all you know, too, she may have got tired waiting, and married some one else."

That brought Meyer to his feet, and made him prance around on his wooden leg pretty lively for a minute.

"No, no!" he cried. "Lenken would not do dat. Lenken is true. Vy, she tink I vas married, too, maybe." The thought seemed to tickle him greatly. "You t'ink I would marry anybody but Lenken?" he asked.

"No, Meyer, I don't suppose you would, or could, but with a woman it is different."

"No, it vas all de same," Meyer persisted.

"But you are going to write to her?"

"Maybe so, maybe not," doggedly.

"Why?"

"I want to buy dat land you own down on de river," he said. "You sell me dat land, I write pooty soon, maybe."

The matter was not settled just then, but a few days later it was, and Meyer became a land owner in Pineville.

"What are you going to do now?" asked Moly.

"I make a fine farm—one big garten, und build one little house, und Lenken und me live dere, und get rich like everything."

"But, suppose when Lenken sees how crippled you are, that she won't marry you?"

"Und, suppose, ven I see how pooty she vas, I say: 'Come, Lenken, I love you an de time. I lose one leg for you long ago, und I give all de rest for you afterward, to make you happy!'"

"Did you lose your leg for Lenken, Meyer?" Molly asked, greatly interested.

"Maybe I did. But some odder day, ven Lenken come, you ask her."

For once Meyer was rushing things. In a short while he had cleared several acres of land, and a little later began to build the house. When the house was completed, he came to Molly in high spirits.

"Lenken is coming next week," he cried. "Ach, Gott! I vas so glad."

Molly inquired the day, but Meyer could not tell her. He said he was going to watch every incoming train until she arrived. Molly, too, somehow managed to be at the depot at train time, and watched Meyer.

"I am so curious to get a first glimpse at Lenken," she said to herself. "I have wondered so long what she looks like, and have heard her praised so much by Meyer that the curiosity is almost killing me."

One evening, when the train came in, she saw Meyer rush forward, and knew that Lenken had come at last. She peeped around the corner, and saw a woman looking around bewildered. That woman had beautiful eyes. Molly looked straight into them for a moment, and everything else in the woman's appearance was forgotten.

"Come, Lenken," Meyer whispered, touching her hand. "Ach, du Liebchen," he murmured as their eyes met. Then both turned, holding each other by the hand like children, and started to walk away.

As Molly looked after them there was a soft moisture in her eyes. Then she roused herself, and, smiling, murmured: "Why, she must weigh at the very least 200 pounds."

The bell of the locomotive rang out a warning. There was puffing and wheezing, and the train was in motion. Then there came a piercing scream, and the train stopped suddenly.

When Molly looked through the crowd that gathered in a moment to see what had happened, she saw Meyer lying on the ground, and Lenken was bending above him.

Molly pressed up closer. Meyer looked up and saw her. "It was for Lenken," he said, his eyes twinkling merrily. Then he added: "But I t'inks it vas only de vooden leg dis time." And it was.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Use for the Spider.

According to the Paris Temps' correspondent at Antananarivo, a special fine net, made entirely of spiders' webs, is being manufactured in the professional school at Antananarivo. The process is a very simple one. The thread of several dozen spiders is wound on winders, the quantity produced by each spider ranging from fifteen to forty yards. The covering of the web is removed by repeated washings, and the web made into a thread of eight strands. When the thread is spun, it is easily woven into a gauze, which is very fine, but very strong. It is to be used for an experimental covering of a navigable balloon by M. Renard, the head of the French military balloon school at Calais, near Paris, who has been engaged for many years in experimenting in aerial navigation. It is believed that the difference in the weight of an ordinary spider's web net will make a great improvement.

It can't be any fun to be a mother, and constantly fight to keep the children's demands down to the size of their father's purse.

HUMAN BURDEN-BEARERS.

Columbian Pack Carriers Transport Burdens Too Heavy for Mules.

The phrase "as strong as a horse" is generally used hyperbolically, but it is no uncommon thing in some lands for a whole class of men to be required to be stronger than mules, or in any case to carry burdens which those much-enduring animals would not be able to stagger under. Mr. C. F. Yeatman, in an article in the Engineering Magazine on the difficulties of transportation in the tropics, tells some wonderful stories of the strength and endurance of the pack-carriers in Colombia.

He says that on some roads there are professional pack-carriers who make a specialty of carrying burdens too heavy for mules. The traveler will sometimes see what appears to be an animated box, staggering slowly and painfully down the mountain-side ahead of him. As he draws nearer he becomes aware that distressing grunts are proceeding from that uncanny-looking and mysteriously-moving box. It has no visible means of support, and when he comes close enough to read such familiar words as "Mason & Hamlin Organ Company," or the name of some other manufacturer of heavy articles, he wonders where the legs are that support so weighty a burden.

Not until he gets ahead of that perambulating box does he see the short, sturdy figure that is the motive power of the machine. The man's muscles are splendid specimens of development, in his hand he carries a long, stout cane, with which he steadies himself on the slippery clay, and when fatigue compels him to rest, he backs up to the bank on the side of the road, settles the lower end of his load against the higher ground, and props up the upper end with his stick.

Then he is free to slip off the plaited maguey-fibre bands from his shoulders and forehead, and rid himself of his burden.

Stranger still is it to overtake a woman pack-carrier, her skirts tucked up to her knees, and below the skirts great knots and masses of corded muscle in prominent view. It is wise not to be misled by appearances into commiserating the wrinkled burden-bearer, and kindly remarking that her load is overlarge for one of her years to carry.

Ten to one she will answer contemptuously, "Oh, two hundred and twenty pounds is nothing. You should see my grandmother. She does carry heavy loads. I am not full-grown yet."

The traveler passes on with strange visions of what an old woman in such a land may be.

The maximum weight for a man to carry is generally three hundred and thirty pounds, and for a woman three-quarters of that weight. Two hundred and forty-seven and a half pounds is no trifle for a woman to carry up and down hill.

A breeder of Charlestown, Md., has a pair of golden fawn rabbits with ears that measure twenty-one inches from tip to tip and drag on the ground.

It is said that rabbits are increasing so rapidly in some parts of Connecticut that they are a nuisance because of their depredations. They are especially injurious to orchards.

A strange story comes from Curtin township on top of the Alleghany mountains, of a bear taking a child of a certain Mr. Watkins into the woods and covering it up with leaves, without harming it.

The caribou or reindeer of Newfoundland roam over an area of some 25,000 miles of unbroken wilderness. They are magnificent creatures, some of the larger stags which have been shot having weighed from 500 to 600 pounds.

A real old-fashioned dragon was seen not long ago, day by day, by terrified peasants in the River Vistula, near Cracow. It was finally captured in a net and killed, when it proved to be an alligator which had escaped from a menagerie.

Western Kansas is overrun with coyotes. It was thought that they had been almost exterminated by the warfare made by the settlers of the new country; but reports from that section indicate that they are multiplying instead of diminishing. They have killed thousands of sheep, and even go into the farmers' hen houses and kill their chickens. Dogs are no protection against their invasions, for one coyote, if cornered, will whip three ordinary dogs.

Worst Kind of Luck.

"When ex-Senator Thomas Fitch lived in Virginia City, Nev.," said the Western man, "he was unquestionably the finest orator on the Pacific slope, and the best equipped lawyer, with the possible exception of the supreme judge, Stephen J. Field. 'Tom' was the idol of every mining camp in those parts, where he was widely known. One of his failings, however, was his carelessness in money matters and his intrepidity in incurring debts. He also had a weakness for cards and never missed an opportunity of getting in a game when convenient. One Sunday morning in June, 1874, Jim Merry, a well-known sporting man in Virginia City, rose with the sun and was ambling down K street for his cocktail. In front of the Ora Fino saloon he met 'Tom' Fitch.

"'Good morning, Senator,' greeted Merry, 'and what brings you out so early?'

"'Oh, I've been up all night in a game,' answered Fitch with some acerbity.

"'Well, how'd you come out?' queried Merry.

"'Lost $2,530,' replied the Senator.

"'That's too bad, Senator; you must have played in ill luck.'

"'So I did,' said Fitch, 'and the worst of it is $30 of it was in cash money.'"

How Is That, Mark?

If Mark Twain believes himself he must think he has lived in vain. He says there are only fifty jokes in the world, and he must admit that Artemus Ward wrote a few of them.

Every man whose wife is extravagant hates the dry goods merchants.

Twisting a Rabbit.

The wretched rabbit is first driven into a hollow log or tree or hole, as the case may be. Then the twister cuts and trims a supple gad of suitable length, inserts it into the retreat and pokes about till he feels the rabbit. The gad is then withdrawn, and it's ten to one that a hair or two clinging to the end will prove that the rabbit has been touched. The twister now makes a split in the end of the gad, feels for the prey again, and when the split is in the fur turns the gad steadily in one direction till a firm hold has been taken of the fur. The rabbit is then dragged out and dispatched, if everything works just right. Too frequently things go wrong. A rabbit's skin is very tender, and a rough handed twister may twist off inches of skin and wads of fur before he thinks that he has secured a proper hold. Not seldom the agonized rabbit resists so strongly that the skin is torn off during the pulling process. The whole business savors too much of flaying a beast alive to be worthy of further discussion.

But in one instance the rabbit did not suffer. A clever youth found a hole under a stump and decided to twist the hidden rabbit. The stick took hold in excellent style, the rabbit struggled bravely, but a powerful pull brought it forth with a bounce. It was a very curious rabbit—in fact, the only one on record which wore a long, bushy tail and a black and white coat, and, judging by the odor of it, it must have been in that hole a very long time.

"WHAT MIGHT BE DONE."

What might be done if men were wise!
What glorious deeds, my suff'ring brother,
Would they unite
In love and right,
And cease their scorn of one another.

All slav'ry, warfare, lies and wrongs,
All vice and crime might die together,
And fruit and corn
To each man born,
Be free as warmth in summer weather.

The meanest wretch that ever trod,
The deepest sunk in guilt and sorrows,
Might stand erect
In self-respect,
And share the teeming world to-morrow.

What might be done? This might be done,
And more than this my suff'ring brother;
More than the tongue
E'er said or sung,
If men were wise and loved each other.
—Charles Mackay.

BESSIE.

IT'S only Bessie Raven," said Mrs. Liddington to her niece, Mrs. Enfield, a blooming city matron, who had brought her two boys to the country for the summer. "I wouldn't let Hal and Felix associate with her on any account, if I were you. There's no good in any of those Ravens—a vile, low set."

Mrs. Enfield looked pityingly at the brown-faced, bare-legged little gypsy, who had slunk around the back door, a basket of late luscious blackberries on her arm, and the deep flush that betokened how plainly she had overheard Mrs. Liddington's careless words, still dyeing her cheks.

"Only Bessie Raven!" How often she had heard that phrase. How bitter a meaning did it convey to her ears.

* * * * * * *

"There are no trout there! You might throw a bait and wait a year, and you wouldn't get a bite!"

It was a deep, solitary ravine, where, in attitudes of intense eagerness, Hal Enfield and his brother Felix were holding their fishing rods, awaiting the expected bite, while Bessie Raven's brown face and big, black eyes looked out at them from a natural oval frame of bushes and vines, as she held her basket in one hand and her tattered sun bonnet in the other.

Hal Enfield, a self-sufficient little aristocrat, by nature as well as by education, drew himself haughtily up.

"I don't know that we asked any information from you," said he, haughtily. "Have the goodness to be about your business."

"I won't!" retorted Bessie Raven, with an ominous flash in her dark eyes. "It's a free country, ain't it? And I've as much right here as you have!"

"Very well," said Hal, rising and gathering together his tackle. "I'll go, then. Come, Felix."

But Felix, the younger brother, had no idea of leaving his cool, shady nook, for a whim of Hal's.

Hal stalked away in high dudgeon. Felix remained behind to cultivate the acquaintance of Bessie Raven.

"If there are no trout here," said he, composedly eyeing the brown gypsy face among the leaves, "where do they hide?"

"I'll show you," said Bessie, with alacrity. "Just a piece further on. There's lots of 'em—only everybody don't know it. Come on!"

And the two children spent a long summer's morning together under the green trees.

Until just as Felix Enfield was turning to go home, half apprehensive that he had missed the farmhouse dinner, he did not perceive that the little gold cross he wore attached to his watch-chain was gone.

"Oh!" cried he, "where is my——"

He stopped abruptly. For in the very moment in which he spoke, he perceived half-hidden in the folds of the bosom of Bessie's tattered dress, the gleam of some golden ornament. Involuntarily he caught at it—it was his own.

"You little thief!" cried he, "you must have stolen it!"

Bessie stood sullen and silent, her eyes cast down, her bare feet impatiently patting the velvety grass below. She could not deny it—she scorned any attempt to justify herself.

"Bessie," said the boy slowly, "what made you do it? Don't you know that it is wrong to steal?"

"Wrong!" cried out Bessie, passionately. "Why is it wrong? You are rich and I'm poor! You've got everything, and I've got nothing! Why shouldn't I help myself when I've got the chance?"

Felix Enfield looked at her. Verily there was more in her creed than he had realized.

"I'll tell you why, Bessie," said he. "At least, I'll tell you what I think about it."

So, in his boyish way, he unfolded the philosophy of meum and tuum.

Bessie Raven listened in surprise. She had never been reasoned with before. No one had ever taken the trouble to explain matters and things in general to her.

"Oh, Felix!" she cried out, with a great sob in her throat. "I see it all now. But no one ever told me before. And father was lost at sea, and mother had us little ones to take care of, and somehow everyone's hand was against us, and we had to fight our way along, so I got somehow not to care about anything."

"Don't cry, Bessie," soothed the lad. "Don't fret, that's a good girl! Here—take the gold cross and keep it. I don't care much for it."

So they parted. At home Felix found that his father had come to take them up into the mountains for a few weeks, before they returned to their city home—and so he never got the chance to tell Bessie Raven good-by.

Ten years afterward! Three and twenty is a dangerous age for flirtations, but Felix Enfield had never been seriously smitten until that time when he crossed the Atlantic in the steamer Will o' the Wisp, and fell in love with the captain's Spanish-eyed daughter.

"If you don't marry me," said Felix, with comical earnestness, "I'll throw myself into the sea."

"There's not much danger of that," said Miss Richfield, quietly.

"But I am in earnest!" protested Felix.

"So am I," said the damsel with the blue-black eyes.

"Don't you love me?" pleaded Felix.

"I don't dislike you," demurely answered Miss Richfield.

"Then I shall hope," declared Felix.

"Hope is a commodity that is free to all," said the young lady.

But at the voyage's end Mr. Enfield was deeper in love than ever.

"Look here, Miss Richfield," said he; "if you don't say you'll have me I won't leave the steamer's deck! I'll go back and forth perpetually between New York and Southampton."

"I don't think papa would care for so permanent a passenger," said Miss Richfield, with a mischievous twinkle in her eyes.

"But, really, do you know, Miss Richfield, I believe you are engaged already."

She colored a little.

"Why?" she asked.

"Ah! you think I have no eyes. You think I haven't perceived that you always wear a black velvet ribbon around your neck—a black velvet ribbon, from which is suspended some trinket of gold, hidden in the lace frills of your collar. Is it a gauge?"

"Yes," Miss Richfield calmly answered, "it is a gauge of true love. If I ever am married——"

"If," almost scornfully ejaculated the lover.

"Well, when I am married," Miss Richfield corrected herself, "it will only be to the gentleman who gave me this."

"Then I may consider myself rejected?" slowly spoke Felix, with a face of the bitterest chagrin.

"Not quite," said the dark-eyed damsel softly, as she drew the golden talisman from her throat and held it toward him. "Don't you remember who gave me this?"

He uttered an exclamation of recognition.

"It is the gold cross I gave years ago to Bessie Raven!" cried he.

"Yes," she said, quietly, "and I am Bessie Raven."

"You?"

"Yes. My mother died shortly after you gave me this. My uncle, who had just returned from the West, adopted us all. Two of my sisters are in boarding school. My brother is being educated in a German university. And I am my uncle's adopted daughter, known only by his name."

"But, Bessie, you said you would marry the one who gave you that!" cried out Enfield.

"So I will," confessed Bessie, laughing and blushing, "if he is still infatuated enough to persist in wanting me."

They were married within a month—a regular true-love match—and old Mrs. Liddington finds herself grand-aunt-in-law to "only Bessie Raven!"

"And really, says she, complacently, "I don't think Felix could have made a better match!"—New York News.

BOUGHT HIMSELF TWICE.

Strange History of a Slave Revealed in a Law Court.

The will of Nathan Springfield, when on trial in the Supreme Court, brought to light incidents in a career that was remarkable. Nathan Springfield was born in Virginia, in 1812, a slave. On Dec. 16, 1896, when nearly eighty-five years of age, he died, leaving property valued at between $30,000 and $40,000.

In his youth Nathan acquired the trade of a blacksmith. He was owned by a Methodist minister. After attaining his majority Nathan bargained with his master to buy his own freedom for $800. The pledge was given, and the youth went to work with a will. The young slave accumulated the sum and gave it to his master as a ransom for his freedom.

The clergyman took the money, but failed to keep his agreement. Nathan remained a slave. Later his master sold him to a wealthy planter. Still nourishing a desire to be liberated, Nathan made a bargain with his second master, this time offering $400 as a ransom. Consent was given, and the young man, after much labor, procured the money. But he was again destined to disappointment. The second master also kept both money and slave.

Exasperated by this treatment, Nathan discarded arbitration and resolved to gain his freedom by flight. At the age of thirty-five an opportunity was afforded, and he made his escape, coming to Boston. He left a wife behind him, but the wife of the second master, knowing of the previous negotiations, induced her husband to release the lonely wife, who soon after rejoined her husband in Boston.

Nathan worked at blacksmithing in and about Boston for a time, and later started peddling straw. He was industrious and saving, his business grew rapidly and within a comparatively short time he was the proprietor of a large and profitable hay, grain, straw and coal business. At his death he owned real estate in the West End, Cambridge and other places, and had large deposits in various Boston banks.—Boston Journal.

ANECDOTE AND INCIDENT

The Duke of Wellington was Prince of Waterloo, though he never called himself so, and had many other titles, for which he once had to pay dear. He told a man to order dinner for him at a particular hotel, and the man did so, mentioning all the duke's titles. Presently the duke came and waited a long time. "Is the dinner not coming?" he asked; "why don't you bring the dinner?" "We are waiting," replied the waiter, "for the rest of the party." They had prepared dinner for about twenty people.

After his first great successes, W. S. Penley, the English comedian, had to act in many plays, which somehow did not seem to please the public. Some of these he just kept alive by his "gagging." On one occasion, when a wretched play had been going for some weeks in this manner, the conceited young author came behind and asked Mr. Penley why he "gagged" so much. "The play will be all right," he said, "if you will only speak my lines quietly and wait for the laugh." To this Mr. Penley replied promptly: "That's all very well for you, old man—you live in town; but, you see, I live in the country, and have to catch the twelve-fifteen from Waterloo!"

A lady on Staten Island had a green Irish girl for a waitress. After training the girl for a month, the lady ventured to invite two very dignified people to dinner. For two courses everything went well. Bridget refrained from speech, spilled not a thing and looked as pretty as a fresh young Irish girl can. But when she removed the fish to take it down to the kitchen she tripped on the top step, and a scream and series of bumps and crashes accompanied the descent. The hostess tried in vain to keep from laughing, but the two dignified guests never moved a muscle until all was still and the voice of the girl was heard calling in richest accents from the bottom of the stairs: "Did you hear me? Fell all the way down shtair an' landed on me fut loike a burrd."

A certain eminent judge who was recently re-elected, when he was asked about the facility with which he turned from one case to another, replied that he had learned that from what he saw at a baptism of colored people when he was a boy. The weather was very cold, so that to immerse the candidates they were obliged to cut away the ice. It befell that when one of the female converts was dipped back in the water, the cold made her squirm about, and in a moment she had slipped from the preacher's hands and was down the stream under the ice. The preacher, however, was not disconcerted. Looking up with perfect calmness at the crowd on the bank, he said: "Brethren, this sister hath departed—hand me down another."

Mr. Justice Maule once went on circuit with Judge Coleridge in a part of the country where the high sheriff was a shy and modest man and very much alarmed at having to entertain his cynical lordship. Coming home in his coach with the two judges, he thought it his duty to make conversation for them. He observed that he hoped there would be better weather, as the moon had changed. "And are you such a fool, Mr. Jones, as to imagine that the moon has any effect on the weather?" said Maule. "Really, Brother Maule," said Coleridge, who was politeness itself, "you are very hard upon our friend. For my part I think the moon has a considerable effect upon it." "Then," said Maule, "you are as great a fool as Jones is." After which, conversation in the sheriff's carriage languished.

At a political meeting in a certain New South Wales gold-mining district the chair was taken by an athletic miner. The candidate during his speech was much interrupted by hootings and rough chaff, and his chairman was soon in a state of boiling indignation. Smothering his wrath, however, he pacified the "boys" by assuring them that at the end of the candidate's speech they should be at liberty to put any questions they chose. Accordingly, at the end of the harangue he arose and inquired in stentorian tones and in a rich Irish brogue: "Has inny gintleman a questhion to airsk?" A stout little Welsh miner, who had been a conspicuous disturber of the peace of the evening, shuffled slowly up the steps of the platform. But at the top he was met by the chairman, who, without the slightest warning, delivered a terrific left-and-righter, and sent the Welshman sprawling on his back. "Now," roared the chairman, "has inny other gintleman a questhion to airsk?"—and there was no response.

Mrs. Langtry, who, because of a number of interesting events, is once more before the public eye, is the owner of a ranch out near Carson, Nev. It was sold to her by "Sam" Davis, of the Appeal. The story of the sale is short and reads like fiction, but is truth. Mrs. Langtry was playing Galatea. She had had some dealings with Davis looking to the purchase of the ranch, but had been unable to make up her mind. "Sam" was consequently worried for fear the deal would not go through. So one night he went to the stage door of the theater where the play was being produced, and, owing to his editorial position, was admitted without question. He waited until Mrs. Langtry took up her position as the statue of Galatea, and then, calling three stage hands to witness, he whispered from the wings to her: "If you hear me, wink the eye which is further from the audience." Galatea winked. That established Davis' case. "Now, if you don't want to buy the southwest quarter section for $8,000 shake your head," he said. Galatea, the marble statue, with the eyes of the audience, was, of course, immovable. "All right," said Davis, cheerfully. "I and these witnesses understand that you want it at that figure." The next day he gave her the deeds and took her good money. She probably might have made a contention in court, but she decided that such diplomacy deserved recognition, and so accepted the situation. That is how she came to be a landowner in Nevada.

A LITTLE ONE FOR A CENT.

The Story Which the Patent Office Clerk Brought Back with Him.

The patent office clerk, who had been off up in the mountains of West Virginia, where they come down to drink out of the clear waters of the Upper Potomac, was talking at the dinner table to the boarders who had been down by the sea.

"One of the men I met up there," he was saying, "was an invalid, but as bright of mind as you could find anywhere. Of course, he had lived among those mountains always, and his limits were narrow, and his knowledge was not comprehensive, but he had read some, and he had been especially interested in mechanics. He had a small tool chest, and by his chair he had a table or bench at which he worked some every day. At rare intervals he earned small sums by his handiwork, and he was the general repairer for his family and their neighbors. It was at his home I boarded for a week while I was in the mountains, and when he learned that I was a clerk in the patent office, I became at once to him the nucleus about which all his earthly interest seemed to gather.

"For the first two or three days he merely asked me to watch him at his work, and then, as he could, he asked me shy and cautious questions. Finally he unlocked a small box, which he seemed to treasure as the most precious thing in the world, and, opening it, he exposed to my gaze the model of some kind of a little machine. What it was I did not know, but I could see that it was crudely made, and that it looked as if it it might be the model for some small household implement, such as a nutmeg grater or a coffee mill. To the invalid it meant more than he could say, and when he had set the box open before me he could only nod between it and me, as if he were introducing us.

"'It's mine, all mine,' he said, after a while, reverently.

"'Yes,' I replied, without especial object.

"'Yes, and I have been studying it up so long. But I have it now,' and his face brightened, 'and I want to get it patented. Only I haven't money enough, and it is so slow to make money here.'

"'But it doesn't require much,' I said, encouragingly.

"'How much?' he inquired, eagerly.

"'Sixty-five dollars.'

"'For this one?' he asked, as if something were choking all the hope out of him.

"'Yes; one is the same as another,' I answered.

"'But why should it be?' he asked, almost pleadingly. 'I saw the picture of a patent machine a hundred times as big as this little fellow, and it was only $65. Don't you think if so big a one could be got for $65, that so little a one as mine might cost only as many cents? And how can I ever get so much money, sitting always in this chair?'

"It was quite beyond my province to help him out of his trouble," concluded the clerk, "but I never in all my life felt more like taking up a subscription for the benefit of the suffering."

The Peanut Cure for Consumption.

In dealing with consumption two things are needful; to keep up the heat and vitality, and also to kill out the tuberculous germs. One means used to keep up the heat is cod-liver oil—which we do not think very much of, as we much prefer sweet cream, fresh butter and the oil of various nuts.

The "Journal of Hygiene" states that Dr. Brewer has a new idea concerning food for consumptives. His treatment consists of the inhaling the fumes of vinegar and the eating of peanuts. He gives his patients as many peanuts as they can eat without injuring their digestive organs. Two young ladies, who had been the rounds of the doctors and taken cod-liver oil and tonics till they were nearly dead, were put on his treatment and recovered. Concerning these cases Dr. Brewer says: "I now commenced feeding peanuts. One would think this a very indigestive diet, but they craved them, and it has always been my policy to find out what my patients desire to eat, and unless it is too unreasonable I humor them. Both young ladies have become quite plump, and after a year's inhalation have ceased coughing, and I pronounced them well. The peanut was long known as an excellent fat-producer, and much more agreeable than rancid shark-oil that oftentimes is sold for cod-liver oil. While not all can digest peanuts, a great many, even with feeble digestion, eat them without discomfort. It beats the Koch lymph, and is the most satisfactory treatment I have ever tried for these diseases.'

THE GOSPEL OF GRACE IS HERE EXPOUNDED.

Words of Wisdom, and Thoughts Worth Pondering Upon Spiritual and Moral Subjects—Gathered from the Religious and Secular Press.

The Emotional Christian.

THE religion of the person whose experience is almost exclusively dependent upon excitement of the emotions and sensibilities is usually marked by certain prominent features. Such a person is likely to be found ignorant of the Scriptures and of religion generally, though he may be familiar with some of the promises and quote them frequently and with much apparent earnestness. But this almost covers the extent of his knowledge. Of that mass of useful information stored in the Bible for the thorough furnishing of the man of God unto "all good works" he is ignorant. Though the word of God itself declares that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness," to him it is as though the Scriptures were chiefly designed to warm the feelings, kindle the fires of zeal and joy in his heart, and pleasantly affect the sensibilities. If he habitually reads the Bible, it is confined to certain simple and easy portions, generally exclamatory and pathetic. The everlasting principles upon which appeals are made and the arguments by which their truth is made to appear, he passes over as quickly as possible, or entirely neglects. On this account he is unable to make a clear statement of any doctrine, or to determine concerning the soundness of any of the views which may be in question, and is unprepared to instruct others in the way of life.

In his religious notions he may be very loose, having little attachment for forms or established usages, unless they are connected with the gratification of his desires for warmth and fire, then he will contend for them to the last. His most familiar and oft-repeated expressions are: "It does not make much difference what a man believes if his heart is only right;" or "Give me a religion that makes a man shouting happy. If it will not make a man shouting happy, it is not worth having."

It may be, however, that he will be bigoted, denouncing all sects other than his own, and all usages except those to which he has been accustomed. He may be censorious, and affirm that men who are not as demonstrative as he have not the power and spirit of religion, are "dead," "plucked up by the roots," or may intimate that they are "still in sin," or are on "a lower plane." If others differ with him concerning measures or modes, he may accuse them of stopping the work, or putting a strait-jacket on the church, or of "steadying the ark." Should he happen to be particularly interested in some one doctrine or custom, he will make it a hobby and harp upon it to the neglect of everything else, until the truth which it contains becomes distateful to others.

Yet the man whose religion is all heart may be saved by common sense and a good natural temper from these evils of spirit, and be a kind, inoffensive, active person; though this, it must be confessed, is rare. Such characters frequently possess a strange kind of conscience, muddy and confused on the simplest questions of Christian morals.

Sometimes, though there is no reason for it, judging others by his own feelings he will declare that the church is on the threshold of the greatest revival in its history, that he "feels it in his bones," that he is as sure of it as he is that God has converted his soul. Yet nothing may come of it. Many whose religion is all heart are roused only once a year, and after the revival ends are scarcely seen at the means of grace till the period of special effort returns with the season.

In comparing the man whose religion is all intellectual with one whose religion is all emotional, the former as to stability is to be preferred, but as respects spirituality there is little to choose. The more intellectual character does less harm than the other, and perhaps less good. Of solid, lasting, religious peace, both are ignorant. The highest attainment of the one is a kind of uncertain satisfaction, and of the other an excited joy which needs much kindling wood and constant fanning to keep it alive.

The complete type of these characters is seldom seen, but the number of those in whom one or the other tendency preponderates is large; and where either extreme exists the tendency is further and further away from the golden mean. Let him who is clear, but cold, pray for holy zeal; and him who is warm, but fluctuating, for wisdom and stability. Then, being prepared by "the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace," they may co-operate heartily and without friction in every form of Christian work.—New York Christian Advocate.

Hell.

A Chicago clergyman recently preached a sermon upon the place of future punishment. He said:

"Hell is a certainty. Why do I say so? Because God's word declares it. Take the words of Christ himself: 'Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting pain, prepared for the devil and his angels.' Experience, observation, common sense also point to the existence of hell. Nothing is a more certain fact of experience and observation than that sin brings suffering. It is also a certain fact of observation that sin persisted in grows, and brings ever increasing corruption, degradation, slavery, and misery. Common sense says there must come a time sooner or later when men become so confirmed in this increasing moral slavery, degradation, and vileness that repentance becomes practically impossible. What then is left? Only eternal hell.

"Hell is a place of physical anguish. Hell is a place of remorse of conscience. Hell is a place of unsatisfied and consuming desires. Hell is a place of ever increasing moral degradation. Hell is a place of shame. Hell is a place of vile associations. Finally, hell is a place without hope. One can endure great agony and shame if in the distance there shines some star of hope. 'Forever and ever' is the constant, mourning wail of the restless sea of fire.

"How may we escape hell? There is but one way in which we can escape hell. That is by the personal acceptance of Jesus Christ as our Savior and Lord and the open confession of him before the world."

There Is No Unbelief.

There is no unbelief;
Whoever plants a seed beneath the sod,
And waits to see it push away the clod,
He trusts in God.

Whoever says, the clouds are in the sky,
"Be patient, heart, light breaketh by and by,"
Trusts the Most High.

Whoever sees 'neath winter's friend of snow
The silent harvest of the future grow,
God's power must know.

Whoever lies down on his couch to sleep,
Content to lock each sense in slumber deep,
Knows God will keep.

Whoever says, "To-morrow," "The unknown,"
"The future," trusts the power alone
He dares disown.

The heart that looks on when eyelids close,
And dares to live when life has only woes,
God's comfort knows.

There is no unbelief,
And day by day, and night unconsciously,
The heart that lives by faith the lips deny,
God knoweth why!
—Edward Bulwer Lytton.

How the Hymn Was Written.

One day Mr. Wesley was sitting by an open window, looking out over the bright and beautiful fields. Presently a little bird, flitting about in the sunshine, attracted his attention. Just then a hawk came sweeping down toward the little bird. The poor thing, very much frightened, was darting here and there, trying to find some place of refuge. In the bright sunny air, in the leafy trees of the green fields, there was no hiding place from the fierce grasp of the hawk. But seeing an open window and a man sitting by it, the bird flew, in its extremity, toward it, and, with a beating heart and quivering wing found refuge in Mr. Wesley's bosom. He sheltered it from the threatening danger and saved it from a cruel death. Mr. Wesley was at that time suffering from severe trials, and was feeling the need of refuge in his own time of trouble, as much as did the trembling little bird that nestled so safely in his bosom. So he took up his pen to write that sweet hymn:

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the nearer waters roll,
While the tempest still is high!

That prayer grew into one of the most beautiful hymns in our language, and multitudes of people, when in sorrow and danger, have found comfort while they said or sung the last lines of that hymn.—Exchange.

Helpless Without God.

Apart from God, whence can you derive duty? Without God, whatever system you attempt to lean upon you will find it has no other foundation or basis than force—blind, tyrannical force. Either the development of human beings depends upon a providential law, which we are all bound to seek to discover and apply, or it is left to chance, to passing circumstances, to that man who contrives to turn these to account. If there be not one holy, inviolable law uncreated by man, what rule have we by which to judge whether a given act be just or unjust? In the name of whom or of what shall we protest against inequality or oppression? Without God there can be no other rule than fact, the accomplished fact, before which the materialist ever bows his head, whether its name by Bonaparte or Revolution.—Joseph Mazzini.

LITERARY LITTLE BITS

It is said that the author of "A Son of Israel" is Mrs. Willard, wife of the actor. The book is a novel of Russian life, high and low.

Harry T. Nightingale, an instructor in the South Division High School of Chicago, has edited for Ainsworth & Co. a booklet of "Selections from Washington, Lincoln, and Bryant."

W. D. Howells, who has returned to New York after a visit in Europe of several months, is finishing a new novel which is to appear serially in Harper's Bazar, beginning next July. It deals with the life of a young girl whose fortunes take her from the country in New England to a brilliant career in Europe.

It is freely stated in Berlin that Professor Theodor Mommsen, the eminent historian of ancient Rome, who recently attained his eightieth birthday, declined on that occasion the honorable prefix of Excellency, which was offered to him by the Emperor through the usual channels. Mommsen similarly refused some time since the title of "Geheimrath," on the modest plea that he preferred to be known as a simple German professor.

A striking account of Daudet's funeral by an eye-witness, Theodore Stanton, appeared in the Critic. The delivery of Zola's address at the grave is described as exceedingly ineffective. The famous author, evidently moved by the loss of an old friend, read in a harsh, monotonous voice, rasising his eyes but once—when he called upon Leon Daudet to embrace his brother, which the young man showed not the slightest inclination to do. They both in turn, however threw themselves into Zola's arms, and he kissed each of them on both cheeks.

Perhaps the most adventurous and interesting career that any man of this generation has had is that of Prince Kropotkin, the Russian revolutionist and refugee. Born and reared almost in the household of the Czar, he achieved distinction as a scientific student. Becoming involved in the revolutionary movements in Russia, his property was confiscated, and he was imprisoned in the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul in St. Petersburg. After long imprisonment he escaped under thrilling circumstances and continued to preach revolution in Switzerland and later in France, where he was again imprisoned. Latterly he has resided in England, where he has written much in favor of his social and political theories. Prince Kropotkin is now engaged in the preparation of his reminiscences, which will begin in an early number of the Atlantic Monthly.

THE VOLUNTEER STATE.

Tennessee's Prowess in All Our Country's Wars.

In the revolutionary war, in 1812, in the Creek and Seminole wars, and in the conflict with Mexico, Tennessee earned the reputation and sobriquet of the Volunteer State. In the revolution her pioneers left their feeble and unprotected settlements on the Holston, Watauga and Nolachucky to pour themselves a torrent of death on the invaders of the Carolinas. At the commencement of the war of 1812, before any requisition from the Government, 2,500 Tennesseans volunteered; and this number was increased to nearly 28,000 before its close. Tennessee fought the Creek war almost unaided, and furnished the heroes who won the bloody field of Chalmette before the gates of New Orleans. It was Tennessee valor and dash in the person of the gallant Gaines that won the victory for the American arms at Fort Erie, which first checked the invasion of the East. In the Mexican war Tennessee's quota was 2,800, and 30,000 volunteers responded to the call. In fact, from the revolution to the great civil conflict Tennessee took a leading part in every war. When the war between the States came Tennessee furnished 200,000 men to the Confederacy and 35,000 volunteers to the Union; thirty-nine general officers to the Confederates and eight to the Federalists. To the Southern navy she gave a Maury, the pathfinder of the seas, and to the Northern a Farragut. The claim that Tennessee furnished more soldiers to the civil war than any other State will hardly be disputed. Four hundred and eight battles and skirmishes were fought within her limits, a record surpassing that of any other State except Virginia; and Tennessee's soil holds "the dreamless dust" of more heroes that died in the conflict between the States than does the soil of any other State. Now all is peace and fraternity. Should the restored Union call for soldiers, regiment after regiment would enlist as fast as men could write their names, peers of the victorious Tenth Legionaries of Rome or the invincible Ironsides of Cromwell.—Illustrated American.

Every man must run the risk of rain

Margaret Mather, the actress, is dead.

The price of feed has reached such high figures that many of the farmers in the San Joaquin valley have turned their stock on their growing wheat, which will not mature owing to the scarcity of rain, instead of buying barley or hay to feed. The young wheat makes excellent grazing, and as some of it is so yellow and parched that it will soon be useless, the owners have decided to make feed of it immediately. The crops on the west side of the San Joaquin river are in such condition that most of the grain will be used for feed.

Sacramento Union: How promptly Germany acts in defense of its subjects. Outrages have been committed upon many of our citizens in Cuba by both Spanish and Insurgent troops, since numerous cases are reported of the property of Americans having been destroyed in that island during the present war. Indeed, it is said that we have pigeonholed at Washington a million dollars worth of claims in favor of our citizens who have suffered loss in Cuba due to the inability of Spain to afford them the protection guaranteed by treaty compact. Not a few of them have lost their lives also because of Spanish inefficiency. But here we have news that plantation and mill property of some German subjects was destroyed in eastern Cuba early in March, and the lives of three German subjects sacrificed. Instantly, and without waiting for inquiry into the case to ascertain if the Germans who were killed were at all in fault, as for instance by resistance or insult, or assault, Germany orders a cruiser to the Cuban coast, and presents an emphatic demand to Spain to answer in indemnity and likewise to hunt out and punish the offenders, failing in which Germany threatens to land troops and herself administer punishment. This promptness places American dilatoriness and timidity in humiliating contrast. Of course Germany has no right to land armed men and engage the insurgents though Spain might well wish her to do so. That threat is a bluff, of course. Suppose in the case of the murder of the Chinese in Wyoming some years ago that China had attempted to land a force upon our shores to advance into the land to punish the rioters, what would we have thought of such an attempt, nay, what would have been our response to even a threat to do so? Germany has no intention whatever of engaging the insurgents in eastern Cuba. She has to deal with Spain, and with that Government alone, precisely as we have to do with Spain for failure to protect our people upon her soil from insurgents, Spanish troops, banditti or any other order of men who invade their rights. But the promptness and emphasis with which Germany comes up to the assertion of the rights of her people is what excites admiration.

The War Department has made the following assignments in the mobilization of troops:

To New Orleans—First, Seventh, Eighth, Twelfth, Sixteenth, Eighteenth, Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Infantry.

To Mobile—Second, Third, Tenth, Eleventh, Nineteenth and Twentieth and Twenty-second.

To Tampa—Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Ninth, Thirteenth, Seventeenth and Twenty first Infantry.

All light batteries and artillery regiments go to Chickamauga.

The officers who will command will be General Shafter at New Orleans, General Coppinger at Mobile, General Wade at Tampa and General Brooke at Chickamauga.

Cremation In England.

The report of the council of the Cremation Society of England for 1896 shows that 137 cremations were carried out at Woking during the year as compared with 150 in 1895. The decrease is not important, as the figures for 1896 still show a material advance on any previous year, 1895 excepted. The following table of the cremations at Woking from the commencement of operations will show the growing popularity of the disposal of bodies by incineration:

46	54	99	104	101	125	150	137

It has to be remembered that three crematories are now open in England and Scotland besides that belonging to the society at St. John's, near Woking—namely, at Manchester, where 52 cremations took place during 1896; at Glasgow, where there were 11 cremations, and at Liverpool, where 2 cremations have been performed.—Westminster Gazette.

A Hopeless Case.

Carlyle was terribly bored by the persistent optimism of his friend Emerson. "I thought," he said, "that I would try to cure him, so I took him to some of the lowest parts of London and showed him all that was going on there. This done, I turned to him, saying, 'And noo, man, d'ye believe in the deevil noo?' 'Oh, no!' he replied. 'All these people seem to me only parts of the great machine, and on the whole I think they are doing their work very satisfactorily.' Then," continued the sage, "I took him doun to the hoose o' commons, where they put us under the gallery. There I showed him 'se chiel getting up anither and leeing and leeing.' Then I turned to him and said, 'And noo, man, d'ye believe in the deevil noo?' He made me, however, just the same answer as before, and I then gave him up in despair."

Death of Frank Fitzgerald.

Supervisor Frank Fitzgerald died at Lone Pine yesterday morning, passing away peacefully in his sleep. The deceased was one of the best known men in the county, where he had been engaged in mining for over 20 years. He was a man of indomitable pluck and energy and in the many vicissitudes of a miner's life he never threw up the sponge when assailed by bad luck, but kept on trying to the end. He was a steadfast friend and an implacable enemy. He has been a Supervisor of this county from the fifth district for about twelve years. His death was caused by a runaway accident which happened about six weeks ago when he was thrown out of a wagon and his skull fractured. His funeral takes place at Lone Pine today, and "Little Fitz" will be followed to his last resting place by many people who will mourn his death sincerely. He leaves a widow and two children.

The Cuban Junta on Monday last officially notified President McKinley that it does not want the United States to meddle in its affairst at all, unless this Nation is willing to acknowledge the independence of Cuba. And, in terms to positive to be misunderstood, it has asserted that if McKinley proposes intervention to stop the war without accompanying recognition of the independence of the Cubans, the latter will regard the interference of our troops as a hostile act, and will do their best to drive the United States' forces from the Cuban shores.

A man in Chicago claims to have laid the mines which blew up the Maine. His story seems very reasonable, and may contain more than a grain of truth.

When Cleveland was president he made a record for vetoes. McKinley's specialty seems to be ultimatums.

Randsburg Notes

Correspondence Los Angeles Review: The Black Hawk Mining Company commenced work in earnest this week. The owners will prosecute the work vigorously. They expect to begin sacking ore at once.

The Golden Sheaf is now one of the most promising mines of the camp. A large body of rich ore was struck this week. Superintendent Long says it will run over $100 to the ton.

The water company are busy laying pipe. The workmen are nearly down to Butte avenue. Capt. Coulson says it will take some time to clean out the ditch on Butte avenue, and that will delay the completion of the work a short time. The pipe has all been distributed along the contemplated line.

The Red Dog mill at Johannesburg is now running on thirty tons of Parker's ore.

The new hoist at the Yellow Aster is being placed in position, and will be ready for work this week.

The Excelsior mill is making a small run for the Magnetta this week. The ore will probably run about $120 to the ton.

The Kingston had a carload of fifty tons of ore at the Eureka mill this week. The clean-up amounted to $7000.

The cleanup on Rand ore at the Henry mill at Garlock last week produced the largest gold brick ever molded in the Rand district. Its value was about $12,000. The brick weighs about 60 pounds.

A man named Martin found, on the 9th inst., a gold nugget weighing 17 ounces near Koehn Springs in a canyon leading to Red Rock.

The Yellow Aster is now out of debt and is employing over a hundred men. A dividend has just been declared, and arrangements are under way leading to the installing of a 50 stamp mill right on the premises. At present 27 stamps are dropping regularly at Garlock on ore from this property, with rich cleanups every ten days.

On the 14th several miners in the employ of the Yellow Aster Mining Company were arrested and charged with stealing ore. The company has been losing from $1000 to $2000 a month in ore, which the workmen are alleged to have carried away in their dinner pails. Some of this is pounded by hand and sold to local dealers by miner's wives. Some of the ore is worth a dollar or two a pound, and one miner's wife is said to have sold $60 worth in one month.

WAR NEWS.

RENO, April 20—9:00 p.m.—Hull's militia volunteer bill has passed the House, and a call for volunteers will be made as soon as it passes the Senate. The President has made all preparations to carry out its provisions. The French Ambassador will look after Spain's interests in Washington. The Queen Regent in a speech to the Cortes, declares she has called them together to defend Spanish honor. The State department by proclamation prohibits privateering except where contraband goods are found. Army and Navy officers think the fight will begin without further formalities.

RENO, April 21—10:45 a.m.—Navy Department has received official information that the Spanish squadron sailed from Cape Verde last night. Orders were hurried to Sampson at Key West, believed fleet will move immediately.

Madrid—All diplomatic relations are ended. Woodford told to go. Officially stated that he was given his passports before he had time to present ultimatum. The president will call for 100,000 volunteers today, as soon as bill passes Senate. Ager says that more than a million men have offered their services. Gov. Murphy of Arizona called on the President this afternoon and offered the services of 1000 cowboys.

The Madrid cabinet decides to act as regards privateering as occasion arises. Warlike spirit unabated in Spain. McKinley burned in effigy in several places. Reported that Spain's answer just received.

2 P. M.—Squadron at Key West ordered to Cuba. Telegram to Sampson read: "Proceed at once and execute your order," meaning to blockade Havana. War Department says all troops must move within ten hours. Senate just passed a bill prohibiting the exportation of coal. Geary, the postmaster-general, has resigned. President appointed Chas. Emery Smith to fill the vacancy.

April 22—11 a.m.—First blow struck by Capt. Maynard of the Cruiser Nashville, who captured the Spanish merchant ship Buena Vista at daylight this morning, sixteen miles from Key West, and sent her into port with prize crew. The last of Sampson's fleet left for Havana this morning at 7.

Irrigation in California

The slight rainfall of this season will cause more discussion of the theory and practice of irrigation than has occurred since the agitation which resulted in the passage of the Wright law. For the present attention is directed to putting in pumps or diverting such small streams as can be managed by individual or neighborhood effort. The busiest people in the State are the dealers in pumping plants. None of them can keep up with their orders. The work which is now being done will be a permanent gain to the state.

The spirit of '76 seems to be kept pretty closely corked up in Washington.

Abbott Kinney has announced himself a candidate for United States Senator.

Stop! Women,

And consider that in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience in treating woman's diseases is greater than that of any living physician, male or female.

You can talk freely to a woman when it is revolting to relate your private troubles to a man; besides, a man does not understand, simply because he is a man.

MRS. PINKHAM'S STANDING INVITATION.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read, and answered by women only. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman. Thus has been established the eternal confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Out of the vast volume of experience which she has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge that will help your case. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has relieved thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance.

SOMEWHAT MIXED.

An Enigma Which Broke Up the Answers to Correspondents Editor.

"Mister, do you write the 'Answers to Correspondents' for this paper?" asked the stranger with the despondent countenance as he leaned across the desk and heaved a rye tinged sigh through the atmosphere.

"Yes, sir. What can I do for you?"

"Can you answer a little question of relationship?"

"Give me the facts, and I'll try."

"Here you are: When I was a baby, my mother, a widow, married the brother of my father's first wife. He was my uncle, of course, but that made him my father, didn't it?"

"Your stepfather, you mean."

"Yes. Well, mother got a divorce from my uncle-father, and then she married the oldest son of my father's first wife. He was my half brother, wasn't he, and also my stepfather, wasn't he?"

"It looks as if he was."

"That made mother my half sister, didn't it?"

"I—I—I guess it did."

"That's what I thought. Well, you see, my uncle-father had a daughter before he married mother. She was my half sister, too, wasn't she?"

"I—I—I—I guess she was."

"That's the way I put it up. Next thing was my mother got a divorce from my brother-father, and he—my half brother, you know—married my half sister. That made her a kind of stepmother of mine, didn't it?"

"I—I—I"—

"Well, never mind answering yet. My half-brother-stepfather died, and now my half-sister-stepmother and I want to get married, but we can't figure out if we can without being arrested for some kind of thingamy. We don't want to have our tire punctured just as we get to scorching on the matrimonial tandem. What I want you to tell me is what is my relationship to my brother, my uncle, my stepfathers, my half sisters, my mother, my half brother, my stepmother and myself, and if I can marry her without—why, what's the matter?"

The "Answers to Correspondents" editor had become unconscious.—San Francisco Examiner.

Lincoln and Jeff Davis.

Malcolm Townsend has pointed out coincidences of events in the lives of Lincoln and Jeff Davis. Both were born in Kentucky—Lincoln in 1809, Davis in 1808. Both removed from their native state in childhood, Davis going to the southwest, Lincoln to the northwest. In the Black Hawk war Davis was a second lieutenant of regulars, Lincoln a captain of volunteers. Both began their political career at the same period, 1844, Davis being a presidential elector for Henry Clay. Both were elected to congress at about the same time, Davis in 1845, Lincoln in 1846. Lastly, in the same year and almost the same day, they were called on to preside over the destinies of their respective governments, Davis as president of the Confederate states, Feb. 8, 1861, and Lincoln as president of the United States, March 4, 1861.—New York Press.

His English.

"Well, you have a fine shop here," said the customer as he settled himself down to be shaved.

"Yah!" said the barber.

"But I don't think much of the outside."

"No; dot is not in it," said the barber.

"That's a good one," said the customer, laughing.

The barber flushed.

"Vat for you laugh at me?" he cried in anger. "You t'ink I understand not English?"—New York Sun.

Reforming.

"Your money or your life!" shouted the footpad.

"I have no money," said the victim, "and my life will be of no use to you."

"I don't know about that," replied the footpad. "I have been thinking for some time of trying a new life."—Philadelphia North American.

A Spur to Pride.

"It does a man good to be rejected by a girl."

"Why?"

"It makes him pitch in and marry a more attractive girl."—Chicago Record.

A CHAT WITH WORKING WOMEN.

Purpose, Heart and Attention Are the Secrets of Success.

May a woman who has been a hard worker all her life, say a few things to you, the garnering of her own experiences? Every person ought to be a worker. No one can go through the world honestly, unless he contributes as much as he consumes in either material, intellectual or spiritual wealth. All women ought to be working women, and most really are, but the term is now applied to wage earning women, working on material lines, in distinction to brain workers or those who work even harder in their homes for "food, clothes and shelter," often of the poorest.

(1)—Think of the dignity of the position! Working women are producers of material goods, and, as long as we have a body, most of our industries must be with reference to its needs. Their work has a recognized financial value and lies at the foundation of the business of the world.

(2)—Let us understand the importance of this work and respect ourselves in it. Foolish women are discontented because they cannot live idle lives, but should be thankful for the power to be useful. Work as if there could be no outlet and become so valuable to your employer that your place cannot be easily filled. No matter how undesirable the work, if useful, that should put a halo around it, and change it from drudgery to business.

(3)—All women are more or less hedged in by environment and ignorance of each other. Pride and caste lines, which we ought to break, keep women separate. Now, women working in different lines, need to meet. One may have more education, another more practical experience; so we need to rub against each other and learn one from the other. Kind-hearted, sensible women are always glad to help self-respecting, aspiring women; they are often more glad than are the working women to be helped. When a library or home is opened for you, go and give your help by your presence and feel hearty gratitude that those financially better off want to know and help you.

Don't think you are patronized—people so narrow as to patronize, don't spend themselves for strangers. Take frankly the hand extended and make yourselves a connecting link between the helper and those to be helped. You are not to blame for less opportunity, neither are they to blame for a more helpful environment. Trust those women who would gladly help you to the best attainable; forgive their mistakes and co-operate with them.

(4)—Don't depend upon marriage to lift you to the clouds; depend only on yourself; and, if marriage comes, you will be all the better wife, because you did not need to marry for a home; and don't marry any one not as worthy and pure-minded as yourself. Gay, fast, idle young men make miserable husbands; a genuine working man, intelligent, efficient and temperate, is the best possible companion. Our farmers and workingmen average the best of any. Any marriage is attended by sacrifice and additional labor. Never marry just for a change; to get out of disagreeable surroundings; for, though a happy marriage is the best condition, an unhappy marriage is a hell on earth. Only a love that will bear all things for one who is beloved and worthy, sanctions such relation. Count only on yourself; then, if a worthy, agreeable man comes, you will be all the fitter for him; if an unworthy one comes, let him go—alone.

You want a social uplift, a larger place; don't expect it on frivolous lines. So-called society wants nothing of any one who cannot minister to its vices or its vanities. It drops its own elect when money goes. Hope for nothing there, and cultivate your best selves so that you will have no leanings in that direction. Your social help will come from refined, philanthropic men and women who value worth more than show, and you can help yourselves by spending your spare time in making yourself intelligent.

Lucy Larcom was a factory girl; that did not prevent her becoming an honored literary woman. The latest poet of Germany is a peasant woman, but worth recognizes worth and has sought her out. It is work to develop one's self, but we are all jewels in the rough—let us each polish our especial diamond and help to elevate the world by elevating ourselves.

Sarah M. Severance.

Written by the request of some working women of San Francisco.

The Bad Lands.

In its widest scope the arid region of the United States comprises half the territory of the entire country, for to so great an extent must irrigation be employed either as a primary or secondary factor in the cultivation of crops. From about the ninety-sixth to the ninety-ninth meridian there is a strip of about 250 miles in breadth which Major J. W. Powell calls the "subhumid" tract. Within it there is an annual precipitation sufficient to insure crops, but the precipitation is so disproportionately bestowed and at such irregular intervals throughout the year that the seasons of successful farming are interspersed with long and disastrous droughts. Reliance, therefore, upon moisture directly falling from the clouds is extremely hazardous, and, unsupplemented by waters from stream distribution, it is not generally reposed.

But west of the ninety-ninth and east of the one hundred and twenty-first meridian, throughout the whole breadth of the country, from Canada to Mexico, there is a district in which nothing needing moisture greater than that required by the artemisia or the cactus can be planted and grown. It is a region aggregating about 1,240,000 square miles, a territory larger than Arabia, as large as and not more arid than the combined areas of Persia and India, with their united populations of 250,000,000 souls.—Lippincott's Magazine.

IRK OVE DAILY TASKS.

Duties Pleasant or Unpleasant from the Way They Are Performed.

"In the program of daily tasks there are some, very naturally, for which even the enthusiastic home-maker has no taste," writes Constance Conrad, in the Woman's Home Companion.

"Perhaps she even shrinks from the performance of these tasks, and would like to shirk them altogether if her pride in her own housekeeping would permit her to do so; and yet she knows that they are just as important and essential as the more pleasant duties in making up the sum of her daily work. The unloved duties are the trying points of each day's work, and are often left to the tired end of the day, when they are doubly annoying. Taken one at a time, while we are fresh, and absolutely conquered, they no longer serve as the bitter drop to our labors. The tasks we call unpleasant often show us the weak points in our characters, they are the duties that call for special patience or caretaking, or a marked concentration of thought and skill for a certain time, and perhaps a perseverance we are unwilling to give before perfection is reached.

"A group of young housekeepers, talking of their home-making, are almost certain to intersperse their conversation with the things they 'hate to do.' 'Harry likes pie, but I almost never make them, for I can't bear to make the crust,' says one. 'How I do hate to clean the lamps,' adds a second. 'Is there anything more tiresome than dusting?' continues a third. Yet all these young women have won prizes in school, perhaps have stood high in scholarship in college, and not one-half the conquering force would be required to learn to make good pie-crust, not a third of the patience would be called for in dusting beautifully polished new furniture, or the immaculate shining of lamps that they have applied for years to tasks of a different nature. Every unloved task raised from its humble position to that of successful accomplishment, and the pleasure that always accompanies such results, adds just so much to the complete rounding of our characters. Achievement, after honest effort, is one method of drawing up the dropped stitches of life."

Respect for the Law.

The old colored man was on his way to the District government buildings when he met one of the employes, in whose family he had done work now and then.

"Where are you bound for, uncle?" was the inquiry.

"I hab business wif de guv'ment," was the dignified reply. "I orter of 'tended to it long ago. 'Twan't nuffin' but luck dat kep' me f'um gittin' 'rested foh violationin' de law. I knows a good deal 'bout de law. I wouldn't run no resks ob gibbin' a pahlor social ner a intertainment ob no soht wifout er license. But I purty nigh done got 'otch dis time."

"What do you want a permit for?"

"Ter run a hossless carriage fro de streets ob Wash'nt'n."

"What on earth do you use a horseless carriage for?"

"Sometimes ter kyrry freight an' sometimes ter kyrry passengers."

"Uncle, I'm afraid your mind is going wrong. I'd keep away from the District officials if I were you."

"Kain't do it, suh. I's gotter hab dat license. I can't git erlong wifout my hossless carriage."

"You say you take freight sometimes?"

"Yassuh. So I does."

"What did you carry on the last trip?"

"A watahmillion. It's a heap handier lan a totin' it by han'. It comes in mighty convenient ter carry de washin' home f'um de white folks ter de ol' lady. I reckons I'll hafter gib up runnin' er'nds almost intiahly ef I has ter do wifout it."

"Uncle, where did you get this horseless carriage?"

"You all's ma gin it to me."

"Nonsense."

"Doesn't yoh 'member de time I was to you house an' tol' you 'bout de twins an' yoh ma said she reckon she hafter gimme sumpin'?"

"Yes."

"Does you 'member whut she gimme?"

"Perfectly. It was a baby carriage."

"Dat's whut I's talkin' 'bout. I sticks righ clus ter de letter o' de law, no matter how often it changes. An' I doesn't see how you's gwineter p'int out any kin' o' carriage dat's hossless-dan a baby carriage."—Washington Star.

A Rejected Comparison.

The man with bronzed skin and long-ish hair was hanging upon every word that the charming young woman spoke. She was telling of an actress whom she greatly admired.

"I will never forget how she looked," the young woman said. "She was as beautiful as Juno."

The weather beaten auditor moved uneasily, and then said: "I beg yer pardon, miss; but I ain't sure that I heard yer remark jest right."

"I said that she was as beautiful as Juno."

"It ain't fer me ter c'rect a lady," he began in apologetic tones

"I am quite willing to be corrected when there is any reason for doubt," she replied, in a tone with traces of congealment through it. "But I do not perceive how this can be such a case"

"I don't persume to conterdict nobody," he replied "I haven't no observations to make further than that there ain't no accountin' fur tastes"

"Have you ever seen this actress?"

"No, miss."

"Then I don't see how you are qualified to speak."

"Might I make so bold as to inquire whether you was ever as fur west as British Columbia?"

"Never."

"Then, miss, you can't re'lize that I'm standin' up fur the lady's good looks as much as you are. Ye can't believe half of what these here miners that come East tell ye. If ye ain't even been as fur west as British Columbia, it stan's to reason that ye can't have no idea of what a lone-some, ram-shackle, friz-up lookin' place Juneau is."—Washington Star.

Waste of Money.

More than £21,000,000 sterling represents the sum annually wasted, on an average, during the past five years, in promoting British companies that gave no return to the shareholders.

Prejudice.—A head full of prejudice has no more room in it for the simplicity of Christ.—Rev. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

Spiritual Training.—A man can no more be a spiritual athlete without training than he can be a physical one.—Rev. G. N. Baker, Presbyterian, Philadelphia, Pa.

Molding Human Nature.—The noblest labor that can be performed is for a man to take the rough materials of human nature and mold them into a saintly soul.—Rev. John Stevens, Methodist, San Francisco, Cal.

The Soul of Progress.—The heart is the soul of all progress. When our hearts are in love with our highest ideals we can reach and actualize them in spite of many difficulties.—Rev. J. S. Thompson, Unitarian, Chicago, Ill.

Moral Forces.—Not even education and culture are sufficiently strong to act as moral forces. All attempts to found morals upon expediency or upon external force, or even upon education, must fail.—Dr. Silverman, Hebrew, New York City.

Life's Value.—Life is worth just what our vows, under God, make it to be. A man without vows is not a star, but a meteor; not a mountain range, but a sand dune, drifting now to the shore and now to the sea.—Rev. H. D. Jenkins, Presbyterian, Kansas City, Mo.

Dreams of the Future.—With the blessing of God the day is dawning when none shall be able to become rich if all are not comfortable, and no man shall become poor without all others becoming likewise impoverished.—Rev. Father Ducey, Roman Catholic, New York City.

Abuse Is Glory.—It is the grandest compliment to be spoken ill of by some kinds of men. Their abuse is your glory and their shame. It is their unconscious and unwilling acknowledgment of your sincerity and courage.—Dr. Joseph Krauskopf, Hebrew, Philadelphia, Pa.

Christianity.—Christianity offers a God who fits into the religious nature of man as a key fits into its lock, teeth into cogs. The skeptic may assail our understanding, but cannot storm the citadel of consciousness.—Rev. J. D. Rankin, Presbyterian, Denver, Colo.

Sympathy.—Suffering humanizes us and opens our sympathies to all our fellow-sufferers. It is easy to single out in a crowd the men and women who have been humanized, who have been purged by the purifying lye of pain.—Rev. A. B. Curtis, Baptist, Springfield, Mass.

Consideration.—It is good in life to stop once in awhile to put our life's work away from us, look at it at arm's length, look at it when we are not in a hurry, estimate the value of the quest when we are not in the excitement of the chase.—Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Independent, Chicago, Ill.

Temptation.—The God who can save can keep; the power that can take a sinner out of the road to perdition can preserve him from falling back into it; the Almighty is stronger than all the forces of evil. No temptation ever yet came to a man that could not be resisted.—Rev. H. H. Barbour, Baptist, Columbus, Ohio.

Inequality.—Inequalities in men produce inequalities in their circumstances. This is not an evil. It might exist in heaven itself, as one star differs from another in glory. We should not call any man poor so long as he can give fair play to his faculties, so long as he can live a truly human life.—Rev. C. G. Ames, Disciple, Boston, Mass.

Ballade of the Outcast.

I am one whom the ribald town
Makes a target for jest and sneer,
Fate, like a hand, has dragged me down
Low as the mire that stretches near;
I have neither of hope nor fear,
Callous ever to jests or blows,
What my days are from year to year
Only Christ in His mercy knows.

Wine or wassail may never drown
Wraiths that pale from my past appear,
I am sport for the knave and clown
Idly staring with drunken leer,
Vinous faces and eyes a-blear
And cruel mouths that the lamplight shows,
Why I bend to this burden drear
Only Christ in His mercy knows.

Fortune flings me her blackest frown,
Creeds go by with a languid sneer,
Women see me and lift the gown
Lest my touch should a sister sear;
None may give me a word of cheer,
None, nor heed of my wants and woes,
How I live in misery sheer
Only Christ in His mercy knows.

Envoy—
Prince, when a daughter sinneth here
Even a mother's door may close,
Why—to the child she once held dear
Only Christ in His mercy knows.

Scale Insects.

The Philadelphia Record recommends the following remedy: "Spray the trees frequently with a solution made by dissolving two pounds of whale oil soap in a gallon of water. The scale is dormant in winter, and March is an excellent time to apply remedies, once a week being sufficient, on dry days, continuing well into spring and summer. The first application should be a good rubbing of the limbs with a brush dipped in the solution. It is laborious to do the work frequently, but it must be done if the trees are to be saved. The whale oil soap is excellent, also, as a remedy for plant lice, which are easily destroyed by its use."

The Reward of Persistence.

She—I wouldn't marry the best man that ever lived.

He—I don't blame you. Life would, for a girl of your lively disposition, be intolerably dull with him.

Then he resumed where she had interrupted him and inside of three minutes she sweetly murmured "yes."

Women in Agriculture.

Agriculture in Italy employs 3,000,000 women.

It is said that a Connecticut factory turns out 5,000 rolling pins daily, and yet some people wonder why our bachelors don't marry.

DEEP DOWN.

We may move along the pathway of life enjoying what seems to us a fair amount of good health, but there comes over every human being at some time some unexpected condition of the system which may be torture for after years. Such is an insinuating and unexpected attack of Sciatica resulting from weakness of the nervous system, which can give more pain to the square inch than any pain that afflicts mankind. It has been found out, however, that the prompt and vigorous application of St. Jacobs Oil to the seat of the pain will, by persistent rubbing, finally penetrate and cure by soothing and strengthening the diseased nerve. It is a pain that needs to be watched.

The sciatic nerve plays so important a part that its derangement may cripple. Beware of its putting you on crutches, for it may keep you there for many a day, while the great remedy may in a day put you on your feet.

Times Have Changed.

"No such times as there used to be," sighed the gray haired but vigorous traveling man who was enjoying himself with the usual Saturday night crowd.

"There was a time when they were booming those western towns that I saved about all my expense money, and that was a mighty big item in flush times."

"Give us your recipe, old man."

"It's of no use now. They're bumping along on rock bottom out in that country. But then money was no object. When approaching a boom town, I'd discover some resident of the place aboard the train and casually let drop to him that I was looking for a good real estate investment. That was all, and it was worth from $50 to $100 a drop. I'd start innocently for a hack, knowing as well as I lived I'd never reach it. Some speculator would seize me by the arm, introduce himself, put me in his private carriage, whirl me to the best hotel, get me the best room, make a date to drive me over the place and solemnly inform me that the town was mine.

"Live high? Higher than a wild prince. They would take no money at the bar, the hotel clerk never had a bill against me and I couldn't spend a cent. It was one constant round, as the boys say. You know my line then. I sold to one man in a place and only called on him once a year. He always stood in, kept mum and shared in the good things. I made a pile of money, for expense bills ran high those days, but I guess it is just as well for me that the bottom dropped out. A man's stomach won't stand everything."—Detroit Free Press.

SOUND MONEY DISCUSSIONS.

Between now and next presidential election their will be hosts of discussions of the questions of "sound money" and silver. However opinions may be divided on these points, there is but one public and professional opinion, and that is a favorable one, regarding the merits of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a remedy for and preventive of malaria, as well as a curative of kidney complaint, dyspepsia, constipation, liver trouble and rheumatism.

Examination Stories.

Isis of Oxford tells two good examination stories. The first is a candidate who in the divinity viva voce was asked to translate a portion of the gospels. As he did not stop at the end of that portion the examiner said to him: "Thank you, Mr. ——, that will do. We are quite satisfied with your paper." "Oh, please," was the answer, "do let me go on. I should so like to find out how this story ends." Modern history furnishes the other. One candidate's paper in the Oxford local examination contained the following luminous and surprising passage, "General Wolfe boldly attacked the Arabian knights without waiting for the other three corpses to come up."

TYPE FOUNDING ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

Since type founding was first introduced on this Coast, there have been many improvements in all the machinery and methods of manufacturing type, all of which has been with a view of attaining the highest perfection. The old methods have been discarded and the most perfect type is completely finished by machinery, and the hand-finished type can no more be compared with the latest results of machine-finished, than the old hand-made Swiss watches to the latest Waltham movements. No amount of patching up, repairing or renovating can ever make a '49 machine, mold or matrix satisfactory to a progressive printer. The only type foundry on the Pacific Coast who manufacture and finish type on perfecting machines is the American Type Founders' Company of San Francisco and Los Angeles. They conduct the largest and most complete printers' supply house, giving steady employment to upwards of one hundred hands. Over ninety per cent of all the Coast papers are printed upon their celebrated copper alloy type; it outwears any other make. Publishers can make no mistake in buying from this leading and progressive firm.

MY CASTLE IN SPAIN.

My castle in Spain stands fair and high
Beside a sunlit bay;
Above it bends the azure sky,
The soft winds round it play.
No toiler from his rest was stirred,
When rose its splendid walls,
No sound of hammer e'er was heard
Along its stately halls.

My castle in Spain is built of dreams,
Of fancies fair and free;
Of hope that ever brightly beams,
Of joys I yet may see.
And when my heart is worn with care,
With strife and toil and pain;
I leave them and go swiftly where
My castle stands in Spain.

There dwell the days of my lost youth,
With each high hope fulfilled;
There shines full-orbed each sacred truth,
That through my life has thrilled;
There wait for me my loved and lost,
With all life's joys attained,
Life's Rubicon in safety crossed,
And all life's empire gained.

The little cares that round my soul
Like little snakes have curled
Uncoil and loose each poisoned fold,
Outside that fairer world;
Old sorrows dead, old pains forgot,
Old griefs come not again,
The heat burns not, the cold chills not,
Where my castle stands in Spain.

Oh, Ship of Thought, that leaves behind
The lightning and the light;
Come forth from rivers of the mind,
For I would ride to-night;
And bear me swiftly, on and on,
Across your Eastern main,
To where in beauty, proud and lone,
My castle stands in Spain.

Dear lady, with the violet eyes,
Afar across the tide,
For thee my castle walls arise,
For thee its gates swing wide;
And all the bliss of love we'll share,
Walk all love's ways again,
For our lost Eden waits us where
Our castle stands in Spain.

TWO BLACKS MAKE A WHITE.

"LET us rest awhile," I suggested, indicating a clump of heather a few yards from the road where we stood.

"Yes, I'm quite tired," said Nora. "I don't believe there's any white heather within miles of where we are."

"Never mind; here is plenty of the purple variety, and it makes the most comfortable lounge in the world."

"It looks awfully spidery," she remarked, making a little face. Nevertheless, she seated herself on the tuft I recommended as the most luxurious, and I stretched myself lazily beside her.

"O, no; not that way! What if any one saw us?"

She removed my arm from where it was, and I had to put it back there again.

"There isn't a soul about," I said, soothingly.

"How do you know? There! I'm sure there is some one down at the burn. Now, is it not?"

"That is a sheep, Nora. But I promise to take away my arm if a human being approaches within two miles. Will that do?"

"O, well, please be careful, Will."

Nora became absorbed in thought.

"One penny," I hazarded.

She blushed.

"Tell me," I begged.

"I don't like to. It's something I don't quite understand."

"I'll explain it."

"Well"—hesitating—"I've been wondering, at least I've been trying to think, why you like to put your arm around my waist, Will."

"Let me see," said I, reflectively, "why do I like to put my arm around your waist?"

"Yes."

"Because I like," I answered, readily.

"But what makes you like?"

"It's nice and comfy."

"Do be serious. I want to know, really."

"But, Nora, you know as well as I do. It's the same reason that makes you like me to do it."

"I don't like you to do it."

"Then why do you allow it?"

"I only allow it to please you."

"O!"

"And unless you can give me a good reason," she continued, "I shan't allow it any more." I felt a little cross.

"We've been engaged for five weeks and three days," I said. "Don't you think it is rather late for such questions?"

"It's never too late to mend," she returned, cruelly, "and I've just been thinking these last few days, and——"

"You first effort in that way?", I inquired, revengefully, but she took no notice and proceeded calmly:

"And I've been wondering if you ever put your arm round another girl's waist. Have you?"

Quite unexpected was this terribly direct question. I had to consider a moment.

"Once," I began gravely, "I met a girl." I paused.

"Well?" said Nora, impatiently.

"A girl with whom I became so friendly that one evening——"

I paused again.

"Do go on!"

"I met her at a dance——"

"O, Will, how could you?"

"I met her at a dance and danced a quadrille with her."

"Yes"—eagerly—"and afterwards?"

"There was no afterwards, dear," said I.

I anticipated Nora would be pleased. She was not.

"Do you mean to say you didn't go and sit on the stairs or in the conservatory or"—vaguely—"anywhere?"

"No," said I. "Did you?"

Nora was ruffled.

"Will, you are trifling with me."

"I couldn't afford to, dear."

"I see you won't be serious, and yet I have something very serious to say to you. Something that Maud English told me last night."

"I heard her," I said

Nora started.

"O, you couldn't hear what she said."

"Not quite; but you must remember that the walls of these country cottages are mostly made of paper. You and she were talking till nearly 2 o'clock this morning. I suppose she was treating you to a discourse on Davidson."

"Perhaps; but Maud told me also something about you."

"Awfully good of her to mention it!" I remarked, with affected cheerfulness, but I felt desperately uncomfortable. It was too bad of Maud, especially when she had just got engaged to Davidson.

"What do you think it was?" asked Nora.

"I haven't a notion," I replied.

"O, guess," but there was no smile on Nora's face.

"Well, maybe she was telling how fortunate you were in having such an adorable individual as I belonging to you."

I laughed feebly.

"Not altogether," said Nora. "She told me"—and very distinctly the words came—"that two summers ago, in this very place, you used to put your arm round her waist, and once you kissed her! That's all I've got to say, Mr. Harris."

I had not heard my surname for quite a long time, but I liked it none the better for that.

Nora moved from me, and my arm slipped from her waist. It was strange it had remained there through our conversation. I became intensely interested in a fat spider crawling up my sleeve, and a great bee sat on a spray of heather hard by, wooing the sweetness out of the bloom. A lamb on the hills behind bleated pitifully, and the noise of water came monotonously from the rocky cleft below us. The sun counted for but little now. There was a long, long silence between us, but I felt that Nora was looking at me, and at last she spoke.

"Will."

"Yes." I was a little surprised.

"Why don't you look at me and say it isn't true?"

I looked at her but a breath. "It's true enough," I said, briefly.

Silence again. Then: "You're not frightened of me, are you?" she asked, softly; and I felt her hand touch my hair.

"O, Will you can't imagine how glad I am!"

"What?" I cried, forgetting my manners.

"Glad I found you out. Would you mind putting your arms back where it was not long ago?"

I put my arm there, but I was sorely puzzled.

"You see, Will," she began, with a quaint look of trouble in her eyes, "I had a confession to make to you, and—and it makes it easier now."

I drew her closer. Thank God women are not angels.

"Don't bother to tell it, dear," I whispered.

"O, but I must tell you. When Maudie told me about you and herself I had to tell her about Mr. Davidson and myself, for we had just been as bad. And, Will, sometimes I felt so dreadful at not having told you before. Often I tried to speak and couldn't. And than I was so glad when Maudie mentioned you—she didn't like my story about Mr. Davidson—for I felt that I could at last tell you."

"Were you quite sure I would forgive you, dear?" I asked, looking down into her eyes.

"Sinners must forgive sinners," she whispered very gravely. "Ah, Will, you don't care any the less, do you? And you won't think any more of what I said?"

"I did not think I cared so much, my Nora, till I felt that I had lost you just now. And the past is nothing when I know that you are mine to-day."

"And forever!" she sighed.

"Forever and ever!" I added, kissing her.—St. Paul's.

The Jew and the Robber.

A Jewish peddler, returning home from his weeks' travels to rejoin his family on the Sabbath, as was his wont, was met by a highwayman who demanded his money. Reluctantly he parted with it, counting it into the hand of the robber in the hope that the delay thus caused might bring some wayfarer. When he was finished he said to the robber, as a sudden thought came to him: "Meester, won't you please shoot me a little hole in my sleeve so I can show my vife that I met a real, genuine highwayman?" Accommodatingly he shot a hole in his right sleeve, his coat tail and finally took off his hat and said: "Now, meester, let me show my family how neat I had a hole in my head and den dey won't be sorry dat I lost my money." The robber, who had been enjoying the fun, told him that he couldn't because he had no more shots. "Now," said the Jew, seizing the villain, whose fire he had so cleverely drawn, "gif me back my money."

The Gingerbread Tree.

There is a species of palm twenty-five or thirty feet in height, growing in Egypt, Abyssinia, Nubia, and Arabia, producing fruits in long clusters, each of which contains from one to two hundred. These fruits are of an irregular form, of a rich yellowish-brown color, and are beautifully polished. In Upper Egypt they form part of the food for the poorer classes, the part eaten being the fibrous mealy husk, which tastes almost exactly like ginger-bread, whence the popular name of "gingerbread tree" in Egypt.

Some Day.

Last night, my darling, as you slept,
I thought I heard you sigh,
And to your little crib I crept
And watched a space thereby;
And then I stooped and kissed your brow,
For, oh! I love you so!
You are too young to know it now,
But some time you shall know.

Some time, when in a darken'd place,
Where others come to weep,
Your eyes shall look upon a face,
Calm in eternal sleep;
The voiceless lips, the wrinkled brow,
The patient smile shall show—
You are too young to know it now,
But some time you shall know.

Look backward, then, into the years
And see me here to-night—
See, oh, my darling, how my tears
Are falling as I write—
And feel once more upon your brow
The kiss of long ago—
You are too young to know it now,
But some time you shall know.

Why the Birds Sang.

She came running in breathlessly, her poor little cross eyes more hopelessly tangled up than ever, the little fresh-air child out from the city, for her two weeks on the farm. Everything was new and strange. She had never seen a hog or—but here is her story.

"Oh, but the little burrds are rawling about and squealing like everything, an' then they sings and sings. And the ould burrd she came a-runnin' an' she squealed and singed too, and shook her wings like everything—an' then they all rawled and singed, thim burrds ye feed."

"Whatever can she mean?" we queried, and went to see. We found four downy little ducks fast on a sheet of sticky fly paper, that had blown from the porch. The old Plymouth Rock hen, seeing the flies plentifully sprinkled on it, had joyfully called her brood and alas! they were in it, and left downy reminders of their painful leave taking.

Primitive Knowledge of Children.

What a world of ingenuity is boxed up in every healthy child! Some kindergartners were giving their experiences upon that subject, a short time ago, and one of them said:

"A favorite pupil, a bright little boy, rather astonished me not long ago by putting down upon my desk what seemed to be a small flower pot with many large-leaved plants growing from it. When I examined it I was amused and astonished.

"The little fellow had taken a large potato and, with a gimlet or some other tool, had carefully cut holes as long as the stems of a lot of leaves he had secured in some garden or park.

"These he inserted in the hole and pushed the edges together so that each stem was soon surrounded by the potato sap. There were maple leaves, oak leaves, parsley, lily leaves, coleus and canna and several others, arranged with a crude feeling of harmony and so closely together, or else so neaty superimposed, that they covered up nearly all the brown skin of the base. The moisture of the potato kept the leaves fresh for several days, and some for nearly a week.

"I asked him who taught him to do it. He looked very much disgusted at me and said:

"'Nobody; I taught myself.' And when I asked him why, he said, 'Why, I thought that as a potato was wet it was just the same as putting it in water, as mother does, and that perhaps it might be better.'"

A second kindergartner said: "I had an experience of a similar yet dissimilar kind when a pretty little girl, whom I have been teaching for two years, presented me one day with a lot of leaves done up in a newspaper. I opened it carefully and found that there was some arrangement to the contents. Some of the leaves were of the grapevine and some of the oak, but all were handsomely colored and very strong.

"On closer scrutiny I found that they were put together on about the same principle as slates on a slate roof being arranged in layers which lapped two-thirds of those under them. They were fastened together with the pretty light tendrils of the grape vines, and also with the stronger stems of some sinuous creeper. The thing unrolled into a fabric about a yard square. It was very pretty and would have made a beautiful mat if it had not been so perishable. I thanked the little pupil and said: 'What a beautiful mat!'

"She said: 'That isn't a mat; that's an apron like what Eve made for Adam when they chased them with torches out of Eden.'"

Conundrums.

What is the tree that grows nearest the sea? The beech.

How many insects does it take to make a landlord? Ten-ants.

Why is a kiss like a rumor? Because it goes from mouth to mouth.

When does a policeman require a big washing tub? When he scours the country.

Why should one never tell a man to take a back seat? Because he is sure to take af-front.

Why is a chemist an awkward person to bandy words with? Because he has always a retort handy.

Where can we find a woman's head carrying many secrets, yet betraying none? On a postage stamp.

Where is the theater spoken of in the Bible? Where Joseph was taken from the family circle and cast into the pit.

Why is there some reason to doubt the existence of the Giant's Causeway? There are so many shamrocks in Ireland that this may be one of them.

A Wonderful Task.

John Curzon, a Polish mechanic, who was presented with a gold medal for his inventions, performed a most extraordinary thing when he succeeded in manufacturing a complete watch in the space of eight hours, and from materials on which another watchmaker would have looked with contempt.

It appears that the Czar of Russia, hearing of the marvelous inventive genius of Curzon, determined to put him to the test, and forwarded him a box containing a few copper nails, some wood chippings, and piece of broken glass, an old cracked china cup, some wire and a few cribbage board pegs, with a request that he should transform them into a timepiece.

Nothing daunted, and perceiving a golden opportunity of winning favor at the court, Curzon set about his task with enthusiasm, and in the almost incredibly short space of eight hours, had dispatched a wonderfully constructed watch to the Czar, who was so surprised and delighted at the work that he sent for the maker, conferred upon him several distinctions and granted him a pension.

The case of the watch was made of china, while the works were simply composed of the odds and ends accompanying the old cup. Not only did it keep good time, but only required winding once every three or four days. This remarkable watch is believed to be still in the possession of the Russian royal family.

The Sugar Gave Them Away.

She was young, golden-haired, and spectacled. He was young, smooth-shaven, and spectacled. Likewise his clothes were brand-new, and his coat of the frock variety. Their fellow guests at the hotel suspected them of being newly married, but there was a difference of opinion, says Tit-Bits.

Obviously, they were too well-bred to betray themselves to any open demonstration of affection. Still, there was that brand-new look about them, and that evident, if quiet, devotion.

"You bet your life," said the youth with the new russet shoes to a friend in the smoking-room, "she isn't that chap's sister. If she was he wouldn't have stuck to her all the afternoon. He'd have been out here with us fellows by this time."

"Yes, I guess they're man and wife," said the man who had just arrived, "but they don't behave as if they were only just married. Let's ask the waiter. He'll know."

The waiter, on being appealed to, responded, promptly:

"Yes, sir; just married this morning."

"How do you know, George?" asked the aforementioned youth. "Did they tell you?"

George sniffed contemptuously.

"Didn't need to tell me, sir. Found it out for myself. Served 'em with tea just now, and he didn't know how many spoonfuls of sugar she took. Had to ask her."

Tropical Intoxicants.

Genuine palm wine is made from the Palmyra palm, and is far superior to any potable product of the cocoanut. Captain Burton, of Burton & Speke, says that the juice of the oil palm makes a drink that is unapproached by the liquids of civilization. It is of delicious color and flavor, and its effects are exhilaration unmixed with the dread of a headache next day. Livingstone makes mention of an intoxicant, brewed by the Majenga tribe of the Zambesi. It is made from the grain of the country, sun-dried and gently boiled. The fermented liquor eventuates into a palatable beer. It will produce a superior brand of drunk, which leaves no ill effect. Indeed, it is an antifebrile of remarkable power, and it was when stricken with jungle fever that the good doctor was made acquainted with it. Despite his protests, the kindly natives poured it down him until he saw visions and dreamed dreams and awoke a well man. The introduction of the drink to this country would cause a wonderful increase in the number of fever cases.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Stopped the Advertising.

APPARENTLY at least one Buffalo physician has read "The Posthumous Papers of the Pickwick Club," in which veracious chronicle are related the various means resorted to by "Sawyer, late Nockemorf," for increasing his medical practice. One of the plans adopted by the bibulous Bob Sawyer, it will be remembered, was to have his office boy call for him at church with a view of impressing the congregation with the extent of his practice. It is this feature which apparently suggested itself to the Buffalo physician, whose effort at imitation and the outcome thereof are thus told by the pastor of a church in that city:

"I had just plunged into the peroration of my sermon one Sunday evening a few weeks ago when an usher came up the aisle and raised his hand to bid me pause. I was more than usually imbued with the spirit of my discourse and I think the congregation was stirred a bit more than the ordinary. But I stopped speaking and stepped over to hear the usher say: 'If Dr. B. is in the church he is wanted at the door immediately.'

"I was puzzled for a moment. I saw that the good doctor was after an advertisement, but it was evident also that if I did not make the announcement the congregation would be distracted by curiosity as to the cause of the usher's interruption. So I made the announcement and continued my sermon.

"The next Sunday evening, toward the close of the service, an usher came up and handed to me a slip of paper on which was written:

"'Please announce that Dr. C. is wanted at the door.'

"Dr. C. was a neighbor of Dr. B. It was too evident that he was trying to cut in on Dr. B.'s little game. I told the usher to inform the bearer of the note that service would be over immediately and that Dr. C. could then be captured as he left the church.

"I haven't been bothered since."

France's Growing Irreligion.

No more striking demonstration of the alarming growth of irreligion in France could be afforded than the orders just issued by the government to the mint to the effect that henceforth the inscription "Dieu protege la France" (may God protect France) shall be omitted from all coins. It has figured on the latter for just 100 years without any interruption, through two empires, the reigns of three Kings, the commune, and two republics, until now, in the twenty-eighth year of the third republic, the government has decided to dispense therewith, although France still claims the titles of the "Eldest Daughter of the Church" and "Most Catholic," conferred upon her in past ages by the Popes.

To most people it would appear that the time for making the change is singularly ill chosen, since never has the country stood in such sore need of divine protection as just now, when the entire nation seems to be engaged in the worship of the Goddess of Unreason.

Bad Temper.

Professor Drummond, who has said so many wise things about the religious life, has said few better things than that "society is an arrangement for producing and sustaining human happiness, and temper is an agent for thwarting and destroying it." This suggests the fundamental viciousness of all kinds of bad temper; it is essentially unsocial. It is not only excessively disagreeable to those who are subject to it, and exceedingly unattractive in those who possess it, but it is also a disintegrating force. It breaks the human bond, dissipates the charm of human intercourse, and for the time being makes society impossible. If all men at all times were as ill-tempered as are some men at some times, society would be impossible. The human race would revert, not only to a savage state, but to that primitive condition in which men lived in the smallest possible groups of individuals. An uncontrolled bad temper marks the extreme limit of individualism. It is a trespass on everybody's rights and happiness—a flagrant violation of the rudimentary laws which bind men together. There is no personal charm so great as the charm of a cheerful and happy temperament, and it is a great error to suppose that this comes entirely by nature; it comes quite as much by culture. It is just as great an error to take it for granted that ill-temper is a quality of nature which cannot be overcome. This is not only untrue, but society has a right to say to every member, "You have no right to indulge in ill temper; you not only owe it to yourself, but to us, to govern your temper." To treat one's fellows with habitual consideration and courtesy is not to exhibit what is sometimes called an easy going good nature; it is, on the contrary, to disclose one of the highest qualities of character; for the spirit and attitude which make this treatment of one's fellows possible is not only temperamental, it is also spiritual. Many of the most agreeable men are those who, if they allowed their nature to have its own way, woul be counted among the most trying and difficult. There is no excuse, therefore, for that unsocial spirit which is so constantly palliated because people charge it to inheritance or natural quality instead of regarding it as the evidence of a neglect of primary education.—The Outlook.

Making Our Choice.

It is easy to make a choice between two things when one of them is obviously a great deal more attractive than the other. It is not so easy when the difference is less apparent. Even a child will choose gladly to leave his play when his mother asks him to go with her to see a sight he has been longing to see. A treasure-seeker has no unwillingness to pass by bits of lead ore when he knows that gold is in abundance a little farther on. A lesser pleasure has no temptation to one who is proffered greater pleasures, and sees them just ahead. So all the way along in life's path. We choose what we like best, all things considered. Our preferences decide the choice, which of course carries with it its inevitable consequences. God or self is taken, because we prefer the one or the other. In making this choice we accept all that it involves. Hence no man will be finally lost unless he prefers hell to heaven. He goes to the place of his own choice.—Sunday-school Times.

Biblical Distances and Measures.

Here is a handy table which it would be well for you to cut out or copy for reference in your Bible studies:

A day's journey was about twenty-three and one-fifth miles.

A Sabbath day's journey was about an English mile.

A cubit was nearly twenty-two inches.

A hand's breadth is equal to three and five-eighths inches.

A finger's breadth is equal to one inch.

A shekel of silver was about 50 cents.

A shekel of gold was $8.

A talent of silver was $538.30.

A talent of gold was $13,809.

A piece of silver or a penny, was thirteen cents.

A farthing was three cents.

A mite was less than a quarter of a cent.

A gerah was one cent.

An ephah, or bath, contained seven gallons and five pints.

A hin was one gallon and two pints.

A firkin was about eight and seven-eighths gallons.

An omer was six pints.

A cab was three pints.

The Father and the Son.

There is but one God; we must hold fast to that truth. This God is love. In our human thought, love implies a beloved object; therefore, from eternity God generated the Son, who is the express image of His person. In the beginning, this expression of Himself existed—this Logos, which we translate Word. It is the self-revealing aspect of the Divine self. It is that in Him which can be manifested. We know that the undivided ray of light can, without ceasing to be light or effulgence, manifest itself as color; yet light and color are not two things, but one. So Father and Son are not two essences, but one.—The American Friend.

Subjects of Thought.

A word spoken in due season, how good it is.

There is more trouble in having nothing to do than in having much to do.

Labor to keep alive in your heart that little spark of celestial fire called conscience.

Evil deeds are serpents' eggs. It is not well to keep them around. They are liable to hatch.

Cares are comforts; such by heaven designed, he that has none must make them—or be wretched.

Wit is, at best, a hazardous possession; it is very apt to make enemies, but it seldom secures a friend.

He is happy whose circumstances suit his temper; but he is more excellent who can suit his temper to any circumstance.

Never forget what a man has said to you when he was angry. If he has charged you with anything, you had better look it up.

Philosophy teaches us to bear with equanimity the trials of mankind; religion teaches us to bear our own, and science to consider them insignificant.

If good manners are not practised at home, but are allowed to lie by until occasions call upon their wearer to assume them, they are sure to be a bad fit when donned.

It may be remarked, for the comfort of honest poverty, that avarice reigns most in those who have but few good qualities to recommend them. This is a weed that will grow only in a barren soil.

The inner need of believing that this world of nature is a sign of something more spiritual and eternal than itself is just as strong and authoritative in those who feel it as the inner need of uniform laws of causation ever can be in a professionally scientific head.

Human strength can be earned through human energy. It is not always a gift which Nature showers upon some and denies to others, but it is often a gradual development in the progression in accordance with the active efforts and earnest struggles which he puts forth from day to day.

As rivers, when they overflow, drown those grounds, and ruin those husbandmen, which, whilst they flowed calmly betwixt their banks, they fertilized and enriched, so our passions, when they grow exorbitant and unruly, destroy those virtues to which they may be very serviceable whilst they keep within their bounds.

BITS FOR BOOKWORMS

London Truth suggests that as Austrian princes are called archdukes, German princes should henceforth style themselves archangels, to emphasize the gospel of his sacred majesty's person.

Mrs. Annie Hurd Dyer is translating into Japanese the two novels by James Lane Allen, entitled "A Kentucky Cardinal" and "Aftermath." Both books display so fine a feeling for nature and so delicate a sense of beauty that it is thought they will appeal peculiarly to the Japanese mind.

Under the title of "The Revolutionary Pictures," a collection has been made of the original paintings and drawings illustrating Senator Lodge's "Story of the Revolution" now appearing in Scribner's Magazine. This collection of pictures forms an impressive gallery of revolutionary art, worth many thousands of dollars. They are now being exhibited in various cities throughout the country under the auspices of the local patriotic societies.

Jerome K. Jerome, who has relinquished the editorship of both the Idler and To-Day, has a short humorous novel ready for publication early in the year. Literature says that all Mr. Jerome's books have been translated into Norwegian, and in Germany, France, Russia and Scandinavia he is one of the very few English writers at all well known.

Having successfully carried his new volume of poems through the press Edmund Clarence Stedman proposes to devote some labor to another anthology similar in scope to that in which he traversed the poetry of the Victorian era, but dealing with American verse. Like its predecessor, the new collection will serve as a companion to the editor's critical writings on the subject.

In Great Britain 6,244 new books and 1,682 new editions were published during 1897, according to the Publishers' Circular. The various classes into which these books are divided maintain their relative proportions to the whole with two exceptions: books on law have decreased in number noticeably, while the proportion of books on political and economical subjects has increased even more noticeably.

The speech by which Gabrielle d'Annunzio obtained the suffrages of the Roman rustics contained not one single allusion to any of those vital questions which make up the essence of modern Italian politics. The fact that this novelty in electioneering oratory should have gained its end, and that the author of "The Triumph of Death" sits to-day in the Representative Chamber at Rome has caused much chagrin to his enemies, who have seriously contemplated lodging a petition against D'Annunzio's return.

A Generous Duchess.

It is generally agreed that the dominant note of the character of the late Duchess of Teck was her amiability, but that term does inadequate justice to the heart from which it sprung. She was charity itself, and a wonderful organizer of charitable relief on a large scale.

It is said that she gave out of her own pocket a good fifth of the annual amount granted to her by Parliament, and a story, vouched for by the St. James' Budget, shows that she knew how to give on a small scale; to be generous in mind as well as with money.

There were to be some festivities at White Lodge, the Richmond residence of the duchess, and an invitation was sent to the secretary of a charity in which the duchess was interested. By a later post the young lady received a letter from a friend, asking her to a tennis party which was to be held the same day.

Next morning both invitations were acknowledged, but the replies were carelessly put in the wrong envelopes. The duchess opened the letter in which the writer declared to her friend that she was very sorry she could not come to tennis, because "Stout Mary" had asked her to White Lodge, and she was bound to go.

The day duly arrived, and the frank young lady was warmly welcomed by the duchess, who afterward took her aside and laughing said:

"My dear girl, I know I am stout, but I cannot help it. You should be more careful in posting your letters, and never forget that you do not know who will read what you write. Don't apologize. I have forgiven you."

Christy Minstrels.

The Toronto Saturday Night tells the following story of Dean Vaughan. He had been preparing some colored clergymen for mission work, and had invited them to dine with him in the Temple.

On that day Mrs. Vaughan waited an hour in the drawing-room for her guests, but none came. At last she mentioned to the butler that it was odd that the invited guests did not appear.

"Yes, ma'am," he replied, "and what's odder still, I've done nothing all the evening but turn Christy Minstrels away from the door."

Thunderstorms in Jamaica.

At port Royal, Ramaica, for six months in the year thunderstorms are almost of daily occurrence, and guests to picnics and garden parties are usually invited to assemble "after the thunderstorm."

When actors quarrel they can resort to the make-up box.

Matrimony often turns love's sweet dream into a horrid nightmare.

WAR

War is no longer to be looked forward to. It exists, and has since last Thursday, when the first gun was fired by the United States Cruiser Nashville at the Spanish merchantman Buena Ventura, compelling her to heave to and be taken as a prize to Key West. On Monday last Congress, on reccomendation of President McKinley, made a formal declaration of war.

Spain is confident; so is America. With our almost inexhaustable resources, it is beyond question that we will be the victors, but the ultimate victory will be heavily paid for, both in ships and men. Thousands of wives will become widows, and thousands of children will be fatherless; mothers will be deprived of sons, and sisters of their brothers before the Spanish ensign is finally lowered on the western hemisphere. It will costs millions of dollars in money, and thousands of lives whose value cannot be measured by dollars and cents.

Considerable comment has been made by the European press upon the situation, the main contention being that the United States has no real casus belli, and claim that our interference in Cuban affairs is in direct opposition to all precedent. Cuban affairs have been a cancer on America for years, and more than once we have been on the verge of war with Spain on her account. But Spanish diplomacy has always managed to stave of hostilities, and the two nations have continued their friendly relations.

With none but feelings of kindness, and intended as a courtesy by one power to another, the United States battleship Maine was sent to Havana harbor last February. Her officers exchanged visits with the Spanish officials—her crew fraternized with the Spanish marines. On the night of February 15, while her crew were sleeping peacefully, the good ship was blown up and 253 of Uncle Sam's gallant boys were sent to the bottom of the gulf. A naval board of inquiry proved beyond a doubt that the disaster was caused by an internal explosion—whether by mine or torpedo is immaterial. Spain immediately disclaimed all knowledge of anything in connection therewith, and was among the first to offer sympathy. But a further investigation showed that the harbor of Havana was dotted with mines, and that they could not be exploded except by, or at least with the connivance of Spanish officials.

The Maine affair only hastened the Americans to intervene for the independence of Cuba. For years the state of affairs existing on the island have been horrifying in the extreme. Pacificos shot down; reconcentrados are deliberately starved; insurgent prisoners are tortured; Cuban women outraged and forced into concubinage by Spanish officers—in fact, compared to the Armenian massacres, which roused the whole world, it was the refinement of cruelty.

Now the die is cast, The issues will be settled by force of arms, and the seas will be dyed by the blood of the opposing forces. Let us hope that our army and navy, which so far has never met defeat, may continue their success until the brutal Spanish are driven from their West Indian possessions, if not off the earth.

Bee: An opportunity to consider a leading characteristic of the Spanish as a race is presented by the accounts of the flight of Americans from Cuban ports and from Porto Rico to avoid massacre at the hands of the enraged Spaniards in in the event of a declaration of war. Undoubtedly these Americans have good grounds for their fears, and they cannot get to a harbor of refuge too soon.

But think of the difference in the character of the American people. Does anybody suppose for a moment that the Spanish residents of this country would be in the slightest danger—either themselves or their property—if war should come between their Nation and our own? No, the Americans are not built out of that kind of material. A lawless band might attempt such an outrage, but they would be suppressed so quickly by the police as to make their heads swim. The fear that Americans as a class would engage in or even tolerate any abuse of Spanish residents in this country is so utterly unthinkable as to be entirely beyond the pale of discussion.

The Spanish cannot clear themselves of the indictment of barbarism by the claim that it is only the "lower classes" which engage in such exhibitions of unbridled brutality. Their naval officers, who may be regarded as representative of the intelligence of the better classes, drank champagne in celebration of the blowing up of the Maine and the loss of 266 human lives. An American naval officer—an American in any pursuit in life, could not stoop to such unspeakable heartlessness Because the Spanish can do such a thing at such a time is why the Spanish can practice deceit and wholesale assassination.

The American people should be able to go about the work of wiping the Spanish off the map—or at least our side of it—with the full consciousness that they are about to perform a task which will not leave the world much worse off when the job is finished.

Two Martial Poems.

Soon after the close of the civil war Cassius M. Clay, T. C. Durant of the Union Pacific railroad, Commodore Boggs, Curtis Guild, the secretary of the Russian minister, and two other gentlemen were guests at a little supper at the Fifth Avenue hotel, New York. The conversation turned upon Tennyson's "Charge of the Light Brigade," which one of the guests declared to be the most martial poem ever written.

"Bah!" exclaimed one of the company, half in jest. "The rhythm is faulty, and some of the lines remind me of pumpkins rolling over a barn floor. For instance:

"Some one had blundered,
Rode the six hundred!

"I defy any one to name an American poem so inspiriting," retorted the enthusiastic lover of the British poet. Mr. Guild, who reports the conversation in his "Chat About Celebrities," suggested that there was Holmes' poem of "Old Ironsides."

"Do you know the lines?" was demanded.

"Oh, yes. I declaimed them more than 30 years ago at school."

"Well, I challenge you to recite 'Old Ironsides,' and I will recite 'The Charge of the Light Brigade,' and we will abide by the verdict of the company as to which is the more inspiriting."

"The Charge" was recited first, and it was done admirably. At its conclusion, after the applause had ceased, Mr. Guild began back in "A Metrical Essay," in which the author re-presented the poem with an introduction and then followed it with the well known verses, beginning:

Aye, tear her tattered ensign down!

"By the time," he writes, "I was half through the first verse I saw the face of Commodore Boggs light up and his eye flash. Cash Clay, too, was all attention. The poet's lines had their effect. As the declaimer ended with

"Nail to the mast her holy flag,
Set every threadbare sail,
And give her to the god of storms,
The lightning and the gale,

the brave old commodore brought down his fist on the table, exclaiming, 'That's so, by Jupiter!' and Clay leaped to his feet, shouting, 'Hurrah for the American flag!'"—Youth's Companion.

Frenchy.

A 5-year-old who happened to be present when his auntie's new hat came home the other day was much impressed by the praise accorded it on all sides. One word, however, puzzled him. "Beautiful" and "sweet" and "elegant"—all these terms were clear enough, but when it came to "Frenchy" he was at a loss to know what was meant. "What does 'Frenchy' mean, mamma?" he asked. "What is 'Frenchy?'" His mother therefore explained that "Frenchy" meant all the other nice things that had been said about the hat and more too. It was the weight of worldly encomium. "When you wish to say that a thing is particularly pretty and graceful and artistic, when you want to give it the very highest praise," she said, "you call it 'Frenchy.'"

To all of which the 5-year-old listened with that intent literalness indicative of his species. Some days after this, when the arrival of the hat had presumably been forgotten by every one, the 5-year-old, with his aunt, attended divine service at a well known ritualistic church for the first time. Upon his return his mother asked him what he thought of it all. "Oh, I liked it so much!" was the answer. "It was so Frenchy!"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

She Saw John Adams.

At a recent celebration in Boston Mrs. Julia Ward Howe "sweet and gracious as ever," gave a delightful reminiscence of her once seeing John Adams, "something which," she said, "perhaps no one else in the company is old enough to have done. When I was 6 years old, I was brought to visit my maternal grandmother, living at Quincy. The children of the Quincy family, in taking me about the town, once led me into a room in which there was a man who looked to me then very, very old. He wore a black silk skullcap. My guides, pointing him out to me, said: 'Look! Look! That's John Adams, who has been president of the United States.' I don't think the fact that he had been president meant much to my mind then, but his appearance and the manner of the children made a profound impression on me."—Woman's Journal.

Varied Matrimony.

It was the boast of Levi Rogers, who died at Perry, O. T., the other day, that he had been married seven times and that each wife had been of a different nationality. Rogers was born in Georgia, and when a young man married an American girl, who died within six months. After that he married six times, his successive wives being Mexican, Bohemian, Indian, German, creole and finally a very black negress. The latter survives him, and Rogers always claimed that she was the best wife of the whole collection.

Ethel's Rebuke.

Three-year-old Ethel had been punished by her mamma for some slight delinquency by having her little hands mildly slapped. After the resultant tears had been dried Ethel put her ear to her doll's lips, as though listening to something the doll had to say, and then said in a rebuking tone:

"No, dolly. You must not say that mamma is naughty for punishing me."—Philadelphia Times.

A. C. McDonald and R. Hession came down from Big Pine yesterday, returning today.

L. Josephs, the popular Big Pine merchant, is spending a couple of days at Independence.

The weather bureau is now located in its permanent quarters in the upper story of the Norman House.

A large number of Independence people attended the funeral of the late Frank Fitzgerald at Lone Pine last Friday.

A. D. Gilbert has returned to Independence after an absence of about a year, spent in the San Joaquin valley.

Quite a number of sheep men are passing through the valley, and local business men are profiting in consequence.

T. C. Boland came up from Keeler last Tuesday returning next day. He says his new hotel is about completed and will be ready to open in a few days.

To the many friends who so kindly aided us during the sad hours of bereavement we wish to express our sincerest gratitude.

B. AGUIRRE & FAMILY.

Romana Aguirre, after examination by Drs. Woodin and Blair on Wednesday, was committed to the Insane Asylum at Stockton and was taken below on Thursday morning in charge of her husband and Mrs. Houle.

Manuel L. Aguirre died at his home at Camp Independence on April 23. After a painful illness of nearly five months in Tulare county, he came home to die. He leaves a father, mother, four brothers and seven sisters to mourn his loss.

The social dance club gave one of their enjoyable hops at Mairs' hall Tuesday evening. There were about forty dancers on duty, floor and music were in the best possible form, and the result was that time and feet flew till broad daylight, when both slowed up a bit.

M. Laprairie, Geo. Thorpe and Harry Cook came in from Mazourka last Monday, returning yesterday. They have driven the tunnel in over 900 feet and expect to strike bedrock in about 300 feet feet more. The boys are built of "stay-wit" material and will get there all right.

Shortly after noon on Wednesday the cry of fire was heard, and a dense volume of smoke could be seen rising from the residence of H. Fehrman. In a few minutes a volunteer "bucket brigade" was organized, and did effective work. Others assisted in removing the furniture, and everything was safely gotten out. The fire originated from a defective flue, and was confined to the upper part of the house. The loss will amount to several hundred dollars, fully insured.

At the fire Wednesday a large crowd quickly gathered, and prevented what might have been a disastrous conflagration. Had it occurred late at night, the probability is that many citizens would have known nothing of it until too late to render any assistance. Rev. T. H. Nicholas requests us to state that the church door is always unlocked, and the tolling hammer would make an excellent substitute for a fire bell. By giving a succession of quick taps, it would be a signal not easily misunderstood. The tolling hammer is operated by a small rope on the left hand side, near the inner door. The large rope on the right rings the church bell proper, and would be useless for fire purposes. Commit this memory and paste it in your hat.

WAR NEWS.

April 27: 8:30 p. m. Hong Kong—Insurgents have captured everything in the Phillipine Islands outside of Manilla, and are now at the gates of that city—25,000 strong, waiting for American fleet. Rioting prevails in the city. American consulate attacked and burned.

New York—A battery of eighteen guns with troops is being hurried from Chickamauga to Tampa.

April 28: 10 a.m.—Cruisers Cincinnati, and New York and monitor Puritan were fired upon by Fort Matanzas yesterday afternoon. The vessels ran close in and demolished the fort in eighteen minutes. The fleet was unharmed. Sampson has been ordered to bombard the entire coast. The Terror has captured the sloop Guido while attempting to run the blockade. Her pilot house was demolished.

The captured Guido carried cargo and money for Spanish troops. Reported 9 ships left Manilla Monday to prey on our commerce. Portugal has prohibited transmission of news of warships from her ports.

Ship Shenandoah, reported captured by Spanish, has arrived all O. K. at Liverpool.

Spanish spy captured at Fort Eads.

A letter addressed to Sagasta was opened by the postmaster at Santa Crus. Contained information regarding San Francisco fortification.

Powder works at Easton, Pa. blown up this afternoon. 6 people killed and many injured. 7 houses destroyed. Great loss to government in high exposives.

Sacramento Union: The spirit and trust of the Spanish Consul in San Francisco excites admiration. He declares that he sees no reason for packing his gripsack, gathering the San Francisco Spanish colony under his wing and fleeing from the country in case of war. He thinks he knows Americans well enough to say that they would permit no injury to come to him or Spanish residents because the Governments go to war. Just so, Mr. Consul. Yonrs is a level head and a courageous heart. If you stay in case of war, you can rest assured tha you will be just as safe as if tucked up in bed in Madrid, and perhaps safer, for there is no telling what may happen at your old home, you know, with Don Carlos out in the eastern hills counselling with his friends, and the anarchists casting bombs around loose. Some pestiferous crank might insult you here, but, as you say, you know the American spirit too well to entertain the belief or fear for a moment that American society would tolerate harm to a hair of your head. The laws of hospitality forbid, and we are hospitable if anything.

The following summary of the comparative strength of the American and Spanish navies may be interesting:

First-class battleships—We have the Ohio, the Oregon, the Indiana and the Massachusetts. Spain has the Pelayo. As regards other vessels, the first number given applies to the United States and the second to Spain.

Battleships, second and third classes—2 to 2.

Sea going coast coast defence vessels—6 to 0.

Non sea going coast defence vessels—14 to 2.

Armored cruisers—2 to 8.

Protected and partially protected cruisers—16 to 12.

Unprotected cruisers—5 to 4.

Gunboats, first class- 13 to 11.

Gunboats, second and third classes—0 to 13.

Torpedo boat destroyers—3 to 17.

Torpedo boats, first, second and third classes—21 to 48.

Dispatch, training tugs and miscellaneous vessels—68 to 25.

Totals—United States 164; Spain 143.

THE TROUBLESOME DUST.

Why the Scientist Appreciates It More Than the Housewife.

The bane of the ideal housekeeper's life is dust, and yet this seemingly insignificant, exasperating dust has been a study of scientists for a century. "When a beam of sunlight enters a darkened room, it can be seen along its whole course," says one writer. "The light is reflected to every side and made to reach the eye by the dust in the air of the room. We do not see the sunbeam, but the dust which is illumined by it. As unimportant as this curious stuff seems, it plays a conspicuous part in nature. It is what makes the sky appear blue, and when we look at the sky we see the dust illuminated by the sun. Light goes through all the gases—the dust catches it, reflects it in every direction, and so causes the whole atmosphere to appear clear, in the same way that it makes the sunbeam visible in the dark room.

"Without this strange, wonderful dust there would be no blue sky. It would be as dark or darker than on moonless nights. The glowing disk of the sun would stand immediately against the black background, thus producing blinding light where the sun's rays fall and deep black shadows where they do not. It is to dust that we owe the moderately tempered daylight adapted to our eyes, and it is dust that contributes to the beauty of the scenery. The finest dust gives the blue tone to the sky, while the coarser kind produces an almost black appearance.

"The clouds consist of dust and vapor. If there be only a little dust, all the vapor is precipitated upon it, and so loads the clouds with water that they sink in heavy drops to the ground. Without dust the vapor would penetrate houses, making everything mold with damp. We should feel upon going out that our clothes were becoming saturated and umbrellas would be a useless protection. It is hard, indeed, to conceive how different everything would be if there were no dust. This trivial common stuff has its considerable part in the processes of nature, and there is much of the wonderful and mysterious concealed in its filmy particles."—Detroit Free Press.

Peary, the Explorer, on Baking Powders.

Those going to the Klondike must remember that a reliable baking powder is an absolute necessity. If, after a long and expensive trip and the great cost of transportation, the baking powder proves inferior or has lost its strength, the miner will be practically helpless. It is no time or place to experiment. What is required is a baking powder that has actually stood the test of the arctic climate.

The well-known explorer, Lieut. Peary, U. S. N., says of Cleveland's baking powder, which he used on his Arctic Expeditions:

"Cleveland's stood the tests of use in those high latitudes and severe temperatures perfectly and gave entire satisfaction. Mrs. Peary considers that there is no better baking powder made than Cleveland's. I shall take it again on my next Expedition."

"OLD COMPARISON."

An Eccentric Westerner Who Has Gained the Sobriquet.

The people around the little mountain town, says the Yakima (Wash.) Herald, called him "Old Comparison," and I knew in a general way why the sobriquet had been given him, but I did not, during my month's stay, have an opportunity to test it, though I had a speaking acquaintance with him. One day I was passing his house and he was sitting on the steps of the little vine clad porch in front.

"Good morning," I said. "It's a lovely day."

"Finer'n silk," he responded.

"How are you this morning?"

"Friskier'n a colt."

"How's your wife?"

"Pearter'n a pullet."

"The weather is very hot and dry for this season, don't you think?"

"Hotter'n a run horse and drier'n a clean shirt."

"I suppose you went to the wedding last night in the meeting house? A pretty bride, I thought."

"Purtier'n a speckled dog."

"The young man is very rich, I hear."

"Richer'n fertilizer a foot thick."

"By the way, are you willing to sell me those saw logs Brown couldn't take off your hands?"

"Williner'n a girl to get spliced."

"When can I see them?"

"Quicker'n a lamb can shake his tail."

And the old man grabbed his hat and stick and led the way to the river, offering no remark, but answering all questions as usual.

The gossamer iron made at Swansea, England, is so thin that 4,800 plates are needed to make an inch in thickness.

ABOUT IRREGULARITY.

A Chat With Miss Marie Johnson.

The balance wheel of a woman's life is menstruation.

Irregularity lays the foundation of many diseases, and is in itself a symptom of disease. It is of the greatest importance that regularity be accomplished as soon as possible after the flow is an established fact.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the greatest regulator known to medicine.

"My health became so poor that I had to leave school. I was tired all the time, and had dreadful pains in my side and back and head. I was also troubled with irregularity of menses, and lost so much flesh that my friends became alarmed.

"My mother, who from experience is a firm believer in the Pinkham remedies, thought perhaps they might benefit me. I followed the advice Mrs. Pinkham gave me, and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills and am now as well as I ever was."—MISS MARIE F. JOHNSON, Centralia, Pa.

ALASKAN SITUATION

A CONSERVATIVE OPINION OF PRESENT CONDITIONS.

The Early Rush of Eager Goldseekers Having Congested the Passes, Other Routes Will Have to Be Opened.

Special Correspondence.]

Although the rush to Alaska may be said to have only just begun, a condition of affairs has already developed in Dyea and Skagway which promises to disappoint the expectations of thousands of eager gold seekers. The trails across the Chilkoot and White passes are practically impassable because of the frequent and severe storms, and will not be in good condition until about the first of April. The result is that thousands of men and thousands of tons of supplies and mining outfits are crowded together on this side of the summit and have already reached such number and quantity as to create a blockade.

It has been generally understood that it was foolish to go up to that country earlier than March with the expectation of crossing the passes, and that one who did so would simply subject himself to a long wait, to needless hardships and possible sickness while consuming supplies which should be kept for service in the gold fields. Notwithstanding this fact, travel begun in January and has continued through February, an average of a steamer a day having landed men and freight at Dyea and Skagway. Those who took this early start did so because they feared a blockade and were anxious to get over the summit, expecting to wait at the lakes for the opening of the river to navigation. The blockade they hoped to escape has come upon them and they are not over the summit. Many have spent a month of hardship and toil and are worse off because of it than are the newest arrivals.

There are not less than 20,000 people in Dyea and Skagway encamped along the trails as far as the weather conditions have permitted them to advance, only a few miles at the most. The quantity of supplies, outfits, boats, machinery, etc., averages not less than a ton to each man. This average will be kept up during the month of March, and by the first of April, when the work of getting over the summit will begin in earnest, a moderate estimate of the number of men and quantity of freight that will be assembled there is 50,000 persons and 50,000 tons of freight.

The only thing that has been accomplished on the Skagway trail to make it more passable than it was last summer has been the building of some small bridges, and some improvements on the road leading out from Skagway. There has been a tramway project there but no progress has been made with it. The indications are that the Skagway trail will not be materially better than it was last summer, when it was blockaded and rendered practically impassable by 3,000 or 4,000 people and their outfits. Of course, as long as the snow lasts in the spring the trail will be a better one than when the traveler has encounter mud and boulders, which were such an obstacle a year ago.

As for the trail from Dyea, which is the one experience has proved to be the best, two tramways are are under construction for the transportation of goods. One of these has a tram railroad from Dyea to the base of the summit ridge, and an electric bucket system across the summit to Lake Lindemann. The other has two tramway cables leading from the first and second divides and ending at Lake Lindemann. Connection between the last of these and Dyea will be made with wagons and pack animals. Neither of these enterprise is ready for operation, and the possibilities are that they will not be before the first of April. When in complete operation, their combined capacity will not exceed 400 tons per day. Assuming that by the use of pack animals 100 tons per day could be taken over the White pass from Skagway, this leaves the total capacity of all facilities provided for both passes at 500 tons per day. This means 100 days for transporting 50,000 tons that will be accumulated there by the first of April. In other words, accumulations could not be cleared away before the middle of June. The probabilities are, however, that during the months of April and May an equal quantity of new freight would demand attention.

In this calculation no allowance is made for the freight which could be taken on sleds by individuals and by the aid of dogs. This would be inconsiderable. In fact, with such a mass of humanity and of goods, it would be almost impossible for freight to be moved at all on those narrow portions of the trail where the right of way would be the subject of dispute and contention. If people interfered with each other last fall so as to create a blockade on both trails with less than 6,000 people attempting to go over, it does not require a great flight of imagination to see the utter blockade that would be created by 50,000 people.

One who intends to go to Alaska may well stop and consider what his chances are likely to be in such a mob, and whether he would not do better to seek some other route or some other objective point than the Klondike region. Of course, transportation facilities from the coast ports to Alaska have been provided for Dyea and Skagway, but doubtless as soon as this blockade so develops that intending gold hunters demand to be taken somewhere else, steamers will leave the Dyea and Skagway routes and seek other ports, such as Copper river and Cook's inlet. At these places there is room for all. No narrow canyon trail confines the gold hunter to a particular route, but there is opportunity to spread out over a wide expanse of country, now practically unknown, but reported to be rich in gold. There are said to be low passes through the mountains from both Copper river and Cook's inlet, leading over to the Tanana and to the head waters of Birch creek, by which the now promising gold fields on the American side of the line may be more easily reached than by the route across the Chilkoot pass and down the lakes and rivers. The government is now fitting out an expedition for Copper river. Undoubtedly these routes will be opened up the present season by prospectors even should not the great stream of travel be turned in that direction.

There are already indications of a desire on the part of gold hunters to abandon their idea of going to Dyea and Skagway, and to stike out for the Copper river and Cook's inlet. Beyond doubt this tendency will rapidly increase as the crowded condition of the passes becomes better known. At present the only facilities for reaching Copper river and Cook's inlet is the United States mail boat operated by the Pacific Coast Steam Whaling Company from San Francisco, the two small steamers now on the route from Portland to Copper river, and the small steamer running from Port Townsend to Copper river. These steamers are already inadequate to meet the demand and doubtless more will soon be put on the route.

Attention has also been turned in the direction of the route by Fort Wrangel and Stickeen river, Telegraph creek and Teslin lake, but as yet, facilities have not been provided. Several small river steamers are being constructed for the Stickeen river, to ply between Fort Wrangel and Telegraph creek, which is the point of disembarkation for the overland journey of the 150 miles to Lake Teslin. On this stretch of 150 miles it is proposed by a Canadian company to construct a railroad the present year under a special grant from the Dominion parliament of 20,000 acres of land per mile, and the time set for its completion is the first of September. It is thus seen that, for this season at least, only such travel can go over the Stickeen route as can be handled by pack animals, and this, of course, cannot be very extensive. Possibly several thousand people will attempt this route, with the probability that a large portion of them will make a failure of their effort. Should this railroad be built and a sufficient light draught steamer be placed on Lake Teslin and Hootalinqua river, in another year the Stickeen route would be the favorite one.

Undoubtedly a great many who intend to go to Alaska are waiting to take the ocean and river route during the summer months. Here there is as much uncertainty as on the passes. The facilities have yet to be provided. Possibly as many as 50 small steamers are under construction or have been purchased for use on the Yukon the coming summer; but navigation of that river is expensive and dangerous. Channels are narrow and tortuous and known only to a few people. Fuel is very difficult to procure, and it is understood that the companies already operating on the river have secured all that can be had for several hundred miles from the mouth of this stream. These companies will not take miners' outfits, prefrerring to take in goods for their own stores and sell them to miners after they get three. Consequently miners wishing to take outfits will have to depend on independent boats which promises to be a very uncertain reliance. Certainly, one going by that route should not undertake it unless the transportation company contracts with him to carry him clear through to his destination. This, however, is a matter about which more will be known a few months later. As stated above, the natural outcome of the present condition of affairs would be the opening up of new routes and new objective points for the thousands who will be disappointed in their expectation of getting over the passes, and of getting into the Yukon country by the present routes.

Alaska Mining Notes.

The Alaska Mining Record, published at Juuneau, in its latest issue has the following items brought out by recent arrivals from the interior:

Messrs. J. D. Douglass and D. Boyle, who left Fort Yukon in December, are the latest arrivals from the interior. These gentlemen made a short stay at Dawson City, leaving that place in January. They bring the latest news from the gold fields, and while nothing startling has occurred, they report a steady prosperity at the diggings, and anticipate that the spring clean-up will aggregate a sum not less than $15,000,000. As Mr. Boyle puts it, the yield last year was somewhat more than $2,000,000; at least 10 times the number of men are working this winter and the output the coming spring cannot be less than the sum named, after making all allowances and observing all due conservatism in making the estimate.

Almost every claim being worked in the Klondike district is turning out fully as well as was anticipated. Hunker creek in particular is making rich returns, while Eldorado, Bonanza, Sulphur and Dominion creeks are holding their own.

Dawson City is reported quite and orderly, with little to break the winter and monotony. The dancehouses and gambling places furnish the only excitement.

The opinion prevails in Dawson that the regulation providing for the collection of royalties will fail of enforcement, the idea being based upon the fact that in the annual licenses issued to miners no mention is made of the royalty regulation. This position, however, is regarded by many as untenable and there is little doubt but the miner will be promptly mulcted in the 10 per cent royalty which the regulation imposes.

A reduction in wages to $1 an hour has been made by the holders of some of the richest claims, notably the Berry brothers, but most employers still pay $1.50 an hour for labor. As there are altogether too many people in the Klondike district even now and many more at various points this side who will eventually reach Dawson it is more than probable that a general cut in wages will be made before long.

Special Train for a Bottle.

All sorts of special trains have been run over Kansas railroads, but the oddest one yet is reported from Fort Scott, says the Kansas City Journal. It ran from Parsons to Appleton City, Mo., and consisted of one car and a locomotive. On one of the seats of the car, under the watchful eye of the brakeman, rested a small bottle, and it was to convey the bottle that the special train was run. A doctor at Appleton City had broken his leg, and lockjaw followed. A certain kind of medicine was needed which could not be procured nearer than Parsons, 100 miles away, and the special train was called to go in quest of it. The run was made at a faster rate than a mile a minute.

Isolation.—Man is a social being. He was born so. His faculties are dwarfed if he remains isolated from his fellows.—Rev. Robert Macdonald, Baptist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Gentleness.—We speak often of the power of God, but it is the gentleness of God that works the greatest wonders. It is this that makes men great. —Rev. R. G. Woodbridge, Congregationalist, Middleboro, Mass.

Children of the Poor.—One secret of the success of the children of the poor is found not only in their natural abilities, but in the rigid training made necessary by their lot in life.—Rev. G. B. Vosburgh, Baptist, Denver, Colo.

The Two Kings.—Wicked men are under the bondage of Satan, and all their desires and actions are evil continually, but Christian men are under the authority of Jesus Christ and must obey his commandments.—Rev. P. C. Cormick, Methodist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Christ's Influence.—Christ's influence to-day is greater than when his sandaled feet pressed the verdant carpet nature spread before him in his triumphal march through the historic plains of the Holy Land.—Rev. Edward McHugh, Methodist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Peace.—Sin, the destroyer of our peace, is nailed to the cross with Jesus, so that it need have no dominion over us. Peace meets the deepest longings of man's soul. Pleasure is man's delight, but peace is his necessity. No man is at his best without it.—Rev. G. Roughton, Methodist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Moral Agency.—Morality is not policy or pretense or learning, but the doing of good in obedience to the will of God. Religion is the most potent moral agency of humanity. God is the real conscience of mankind.—Rev. Silverman, Hebrew, New York City.

Results.—The best results are attained only when still better ones are sought. To do as well to-day as I did yesterday I must do better. Life is valuable not only for what it is, but for what it is to be.—Rev. Clarence T. Brown, Congregationalist, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Demands of Satan.—As it was, as it is now, and ever will be, the devil is prince of this world, so will he make his deceitful demands, taking advantage of the weakness of humanity. As he approached Christ, so does he approach us to-day.—Rev. C. L. Thurgood, Disciple, Pittsburg, Pa.

Time.—Time is relentless. It can not be bottled up and given out as we desire. No syndicate can make a corner on time for its own benefit. It can not be monopolized; it can be taken from no man. All are equally rich as regards to time.—Rev. V. S. Milburn, Universalist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Womanhood.—Woman has been the heart of the Christian Church, if not the brain. She has supplied it with true, strong feeling, how little soever she may have contributed to its bewildering speculations or to its ponderous learning.—Rev. J. H. Rylance, Episcopalian, New York City.

Security.—This world presents an awful scene relative to security. The land is full of physicians ready to draw away disease. Inventors of all kinds offer their mechanism for the safety of business interest. Everywhere and everybody is trying to be secured.—Rev. G. W. Perryman, Baptist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Social Gospel.—We are only beginning to understand the social side of the gospel of Christ. The social side is the important side. It is the social side that Christ emphasized. We are still suffering an exclusive preaching of the gospel of individualism.—Rev. W. S. Rainsford, Episcopalian, New York City.

Wanted to Pay His Poll Tax.

Some funny things happen in the public buildings, says the Richmond State.

An aged negro shuffled into the office of Capt. Frank Cunningham at the City Hall the other day, and made the popular City Collector's hair curl by announcing:

"Boss, I done come to pay the license on my pole cats."

"What!" shouted Captain Frank, as a horrible suspicion that the old darky had brought them with him possessed him.

The clerks in the office dropped their pens and a police sergeant who was standing in the doorway fled precipitately.

The ancient Ethiopian gazed in wonder upon the scene of consternation that he had inadvertently effected.

"What's that you said?" inquired the Captain, as he regarded the surprised darky from a distance.

"My pole cats, boss. I want to gin you my pole cats," said the old man, thrusting a black paw into the pocket of his breeches.

"Why do you want to give me your pole cats?" asked the collector, recovering his equanimity as an idea dawned suddenly upon him.

"Case I owes it, boss; an' dey done tole me dat culled folks whu don' pay de pole cats c'yant vote."

"Poll-tax, by ginger!" yelled the collector with a great gasp of relief, and the clerks all took up their pens again and said:

"Oh!"

Chase Homestead.

Mrs. Kate Chase Sprague, who went to Ohio to present to friends a plan by which the Salmon P. Chase homestead, near Washington, might be saved from foreclosure sale, writes that she has succeeded in refunding the debt upon the place. The property is valued by conservative real estate judges at $150,000. The mortgage on it is for $80,000. She has practically disposed of $80,000 of long-time certificates of indebtedness, secured by mortgage on the place, and will lift the matured mortgage.—New York Sun.

There may be wives who drive their husbands to drink, but there are lots of other husbands who would like to have such wives.

OF COURSE.

We all know what toothache is, with the nagging, jumping, throbbing of a single nerve in a single tooth. Now when we come to reflect that a system of nerves concentrated in some part of the body are all aching at once, with their throbs and pulsations of pain, we know what the worst form of Neuralgia is. It is very common, very violent, simply because it is very often, like toothache, allowed to take its own course. Now it is known as a fact that when St. Jacobs Oil is used on the parts affected, with patient application, the pain will succumb and relief will certainly follow. This is true of acute or chronic cases, founded upon the testimony of many who have been cured of the worst form.

HYPNOTIC WONDERS.

No one need go to Paris now to see all that is marvelous in hypnotism. In the hypnotic wards of many hospitals of this country are hypnotic subjects that a mere glance, it is said, throws them into the trance state. But in order to overcome that obstinate kidney trouble, the persistent use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is necessary. Use it also systematically for malarial, bilious, dyspeptic, rheumatic and nervous diseases.

TYPE FOUNDING ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

Since type founding was first introduced on this Coast, there have been many improvements in all the machinery and methods of manufacturing type, all of which has been with a view of attaining the highest perfection. The old methods have been discarded and the most perfect type is completely finished by machinery, and the hand-finished type can no more be compared with the latest results of machine-finished, than the old hand-made Swiss watches to the latest Waltham movements. No amount of patching up, repairing or renovating can ever make a '49 machine, mold or matrix satisfactory to a progressive printer. The only type foundry on the Pacific Coast who manufacture and finish type on perfecting machines is the American Type Founders' Company of San Francisco and Los Angeles. They conduct the largest and most complete printers' supply house, giving steady employment to upwards of one hundred hands. Over ninety per cent of all the Coast papers are printed upon their celebrated copper alloy type; it outwears any other make. Publishers can make no mistake in buying from this leading and progressive firm.

Human Nature In the Steerage.

H. Phelps Whitmarsh writes of "The Steerage of Today" in The Century. Mr. Whitmarsh, who crossed the ocean in the steerage himself, says: To me the most noticeable thing about the life was the ease with which the yoke of civilization was thrown off. If conditions be favorable, I opine that a large proportion of the steerage passengers throw back to their Darwinian ancestry about the third day out. Away from home, country and religious influences, unrestrained by custom and conventionality, bound by no laws of action and separated from all that force of opinion so strong in the world ashore, they let themselves go and allow their baser natures to run riot. No sooner has the seasickness left them than they growl and snarl over their food like dogs, scrambling for the choice pieces and running off to their bunks with them; they grow quarrelsome; their talk is lewd and insulting; brute strength is in the ascendant, and, without shame, both sexes show the animal side of their natures. But most apparent and obnoxious are the filthy habits into which many of them fall. The sea seems utterly to demoralize them. Some of them will remain for days in their berths, where, without changing their clothes, they eat, sleep and are sick with the utmost impartiality and without the blessing of soap and water. Hence the steerage as a whole, the "married quarters" (where there were children) in particular, was ill smelling and otherwise objectionable.

THE HILLS OF GOD.

We journeyed through the lowland shadows,
Through the dull, dull mist and rain;
Oh, chilling the fogs of the marshes
And the winds from the lonely plain!
And our hearts grow sick with longing
For the beautiful paths untrod,
For we know that away above us
Stretch the glad green Hills of God.

Our feet are chained to the valley,
We plow and we sow and reap;
There are strifes and toils for the noonday,
And a grave where at night we sleep.
But a something speaks within us:
"Look away from the spade and the clod,
O soul, look up for thy birthright,
And away to the Hills of God!

"In the winds that sweep their summits
Is healing for all thy ills;
Up, up! till thou feel the current!
There is help, there is help in the hills.
Let darkness and sore disaster
But sunder thee from the sod,
And know thou shalt thrive in the sunlight
That crowneth the Hills of God."
—Utica Globe.

A CHANGE OF PURPOSE.

When Silas Ryan, the proprietor and and manager of Ryan's ranch, set his employes at work, fencing in a large body of the best Government land in Southern Kansas, he stirred up a good-sized hornet's nest, and brought the insects buzzing angrily about his head. He had no shadow of right to the land, and naturally the settlers and home-seekers resented his cool appropriation of it to his own use. There were men who wanted it for homes, and who were entitled to it under the laws, and these men looked upon Ryan's conduct as a base infringement on their rights and were not sparing in their denunciation of him and his order.

Near Ryan's ranch there was a little town known as Prairie City. It was an insignificant place, with less than 200 population, but it gave promise of great things in the future. Its inhabitants, and the settlers on the prairie about it, believed that in time Prairie City would become one of the leading towns of Kansas. Unfortunately, however, the hopes of those people were never to be realized. A railroad was soon after built through that part of the country and it missed Prairie City by just two miles. The result was a new town on the railroad and the death of the old one. Prairie City went the way of hundreds of other Kansas towns. Its population took up their possessions, including their houses, and moved across the prairie to the railroad.

In Prairie City's halcyon days, however, it boasted of a newspaper, the Prairie City Eagle. It was not much of a paper, being small and poorly printed, but it was quite as good as its patronage justified. Its subscription list was extremely limited, and its advertising business was dwarfed to one column of display matter and a few lines of pay locals.

The Eagle, as a matter of course, stood by the town people and the settlers, and when Ryan set his men to fencing in the public lands for grazing purposes, it came out with a strong editorial denouncing him in the severest terms. It pronounced his action dishonest, as he was stealing the people's rights. It went further and said that it was the lowest and most contemptible species of dishonesty, since by it he was stealing the homes from poor, struggling men and their wives and children, thereby robbing them of a chance to earn an honest living.

"It is the duty of the homeseekers," it went on, "to protect themselves against the encroachments of this greedy cormorant, who, for the sake of adding to his ill-gotten wealth, would starve even the innocent, unconscious, helpless babe in its mother's arms. It is the duty of the settlers to band themselves together, to take the law in their own hands, and cut the wire that shuts them out of their own. Tear down the fence, drive off or kill the usurper's cattle and give him to understand that if the Government won't protect you, you can and will protect yourselves."

A copy of the paper containing this editorial fell into Ryan's hands. He read it and boiled over with wrath and indignation. He was forced to admit that there was much truth in the article, but it was none the more palatable to him for that. He swore vengeance against the Eagle and its editor, and vowed that not another issue of the paper should be published.

At dinner time he read the article to his employes as they sat at the table. They were six in number, recently emigrated from a ranch down in Texas, and had a reputation for being the hardest and most reckless dare-devils that ever rode the range. When Ryan had finished reading he said:

"What do you think of that?"

"I think it's blamed big crowing from a mighty little rooster," one of the cowboys replied.

"If the settlers want to take that editor's advice and try it on about cutting the wires," another said, "just let them. They'll find before they get through with it that they've got into the hottest and most unhealthy job they ever tackled."

"Then you boys will stand by me?" Ryan questioned.

"Of course we will," one of them answered. "We're paid to work for you, and we've not got any love for settlers. We'll see that your fence is not cut and that your cattle are not bothered."

"That's all right," Ryan said, "but there is something else I want you to do."

"What is it?"

"I want this paper squelched."

"We'll squelch it."

"I want you to ride over to Prairie City to-night and clean the thing out root and branch. Burn the office, smash up the old press and chase the editor out of the country."

"We'll do it."

Just after supper that night the cowboys loaded their pistols carefully and buckled them about their waists. Then they brought out their horses, saddled and mounted them, and rode away in the direction of Prairie City at a mad gallop. Just before they reached the town they came to a halt. One of them said:

"Now, boys, we don't want to take any reckless chances in this business, so we had better be a little cautious. I guess that editor is a spindle-shanked, goggle-eyed old rooster from the East who'd drop dead at the sight of a pistol, but still he may be a varmint of a different color. For all we know he may turn loose and go to pumping lead into us at the rate of about sixty bullets a minute. It will be safest to kind of slip up on him and take him unawares."

The others agreed to this proposition, and accordingly they rode quietly into town, dismounted and tied their horses, and noiselessly approached the Eagle office. A light was shining through a window of the little one-story box building, and by one common impulse the cowboys stole cautiously forward to this window with a view to peeping into the room to see how the land lay.

On one side of the room they saw a rickety old typestand containing a half dozen cases of type. On the other side stood an old press, while in the center there was a zinc-covered goods box which answered in the place of an imposing stone. Up at the end of the room was a small table at which was seated a woman.

The woman's elbows rested on the table and her face lay between her hands. She was sitting directly in front of the window, apparently looking straight at it, so the cowboys had a good, square view of her features. They saw that she was young and pretty, not much more than a child and very sad. There was a deeply troubled expression on her face, and once they saw her brush tears from her eyes.

"The editor's wife or daughter, I reckon," one of the cowboys whispered.

"Guess so," one of the others replied; "and like as not the old whelp's been abusing her."

"I'm going in and talk to her," the first speaker announced. "You chaps wait outside till I come back."

"A good idea," another agreed. "We want to see a little more into this business before we do anything rash."

The cowboy walked around to the door and entered the office. He passed across the floor and stopped just before the little table at which the woman was sitting. He took off his hat, made an awkward bow and said:

"Good evening, lady. I hope I find you well."

A shade of fear passed over the woman's face and a startled look came to her eyes when she saw the man's huge pistols and noted his cowboy attire. Still, she answered calmly and bravely enough:

"I am quite well, thank you. Is there anything I can do for you?"

"Why, I don't know. I reckon maybe I'd like to see the editor of this paper."

"I am the editor."

"Well, but I want to see the man—your father or husband, or whoever he is."

"There is no man here. I am all alone."

"You don't mean that you are running this paper all by yourself!"

"Yes, sir, except for the help of a boy, who manages the press for me."

The cowboy whistled, then stood staring at the woman in amazement. At last he ejaculated:

"Well, if that don't stump me. A woman running a paper all alone with no men folks to help her! Gee, but it must be lots of hard work!"

"It is, but I don't mind that. I'd be willing to work night and day if I could just manage some way to keep the paper going."

"You're not figuring on stopping it, are you?"

"Yes, I'll have to stop it. I can't get enough money to buy any more paper. My mother is sick and I have to buy medicine and things for her. Poor mother! I don't know how I shall provide for her now."

The girl's voice trembled and her eyes filled with tears. The cowboy looked on a moment, then paced rapidly two or three times across the room. Finally he said:

"You wait here for me. I'll be back in a few minutes."

He hurried out to his companions, who were waiting at the door. He drew them away to a safe distance from the office, and then told them all he had discovered. They heard him to the end.

"So that woman," one of them said, "wrote that piece about Ryan?"

"She did."

"Then if we kick up a fuss with anybody it's got to be with her."

"It has."

"In that case I guess we won't kick up any fuss."

"Not if I can help it. It's all right enough to pile onto a man and squelch him, but it's a different thing when it comes to a poor lone woman struggling bravely to support her sick mother."

"The paper is going to quit, anyhow," some one remarked, "so it's all right to let it alone. It can't do any more damage."

The man who had come from the room was silent and thoughtful for a moment, then he said:

"I reckon the paper's not going to quit, either. I've got money enough to tide it over a few weeks, and——"

"I've got enough to tide it over a few more weeks," another said, and he was promptly followed by the others with like propositions. The upshot of the matter was that a minute later a roll of money was put into the girl's hands, and before she had recovered from her astonishment the cowboys were on their way back to the ranch.

"Wonder what Ryan will think?" one of them remarked as they rode along.

"Don't matter what he thinks," another replied. "We didn't hire to him to make war on women.

Thanks to the aid given by the cowboys the Eagle lived; and when Prairie City moved to the new town the Eagle went with it, and there it grew and prospered and in time became a prominent paper. But the editor never knew the true object of the night's visit that was paid her by the cowboys of Ryan's ranch. Whether she would have thought any the less of them if she had known is a matter of doubt.

Naturally Ryan was displeased with the action of his employes, the more especially since the Eagle kept up its fight on him. But there was nothing he could do save submit, since he had contracted with his employes for a year, and he could not discharge them for refusing to do an unlawful act. He was entirely helpless and when the settlers cut his fence and took up claims on his ranch he had to quietly give way to them and seek grazing lands elsewhere.—Utica Globe.

A remarkable eel has been discovered in the Fiji Islands. It has a peculiar formation in its throat, which causes it to whistle when in an excited state. The eel is fifteen feet long, and several inches in girth.

In the markets of Brazil one often sees live snakes—a species of boa—from ten to fifteen feet long. They are employed in many houses to hunt rats at night, being otherwise perfectly harmless. They become attached to a house like a cat or a dog.

Mrs. Flitch, of Denver, Colo., drives an ostrich, behind which she rides in a light wagon. She is the only woman in the world who owns a zoological garden, and manages it herself. The animal isn't guided by the reins, but by a long whip, with which the driver hits it on the feathers.

Certainly a Title of "Distinction."

Not long ago an Indian general, who had returned home on the expiry of his term of service, was invited to "dine and sleep" at Windsor. He took advantage of his proximity to Eton to walk over to the famous public school. He there called on the house master of a young Indian prince, the son of a Rajah who had thought it well to send his son over to England to be educated. The general informed the house master that he had, before leaving India, promised the Rajah to deliver a message to his son's master. It was that the Rajah desired that his son should receive no exceptional treatment in the school on account of his exalted birth, and that his fellow students should not be encouraged to show him any special deference. The house master hastened to reassure the Rajah's messenger.

"Pray tell the Rajah that there is no reason to be alarmed that his son will receive too great deference. You may assure his highness that in this school his son answers to the name of 'Nigger,' and among his intimates he is commonly called 'Coal-Scuttle.'"

Ignorance of the Bible.

Popular ignorance of the Bible seems to be on the increase. The Watchman, a Baptist paper, published in Boston, says: "A generation is growing up in our Sunday schools which is practically unacquainted with the Bible. Literary men of high standing deplore the popular ignorance of the Scriptures; ministers say they can no longer take it for granted that the simplest Biblical allusions will be understood by some of the members of their congregations, who have spent ten years or more in the Sunday school; the religious press teems with complaints that Christian people do not know their Bibles; the daily papers, during the last two or three years, have repeatedly emphasized the unfamiliarity of the people with the Scriptures; and educational institutions have found it necessary to make special provision for acquainting their pupils with the Bible, deeming it at least a reproach to an educated person to be unfamiliar with the Bible. If any one doubts the extent of popular ignorance of the Bible among the young people, even of Christian families, let him test an average class of boys or girls, and a few questions will convince the most skeptical."

A Bitter Word.

A bitter word dropped from our lips against a brother is like a pistol fired amongst mountains. The short report is caught up and intensified and echoed by rocks and caves till it is like thunder. So an unkind word, in passing from mouth to mouth, receives progressive exaggerations, and snow-ball like increases as it rolls. Scandal-mongers are the persons who tear the bandages from social wounds and prevent their healing. A whisper-word of slander is like that fox with a firebrand tied to its tail, that Sampson sent among the standing corn of the Philistines. It brings destruction into wide areas of peace and love. Evil-speaking is like a freezing wind, seals up the sparkling waters and tender juices of flowers and binds up the hearts of men in uncharitableness and bitterness of spirit, as the earth is bound in the grip of winter.—Catholic Review.

Turkish Army Rations.

Correspondents who accompanied the Turkish army during the recent war with Greece refer often to the dietary habits of the Turks. Pilau, or pilaff, the national dish, receives great praise. It is what we should call a chowder, composed of lamb, rice, butter, almonds, raisins, allspice, powdered mace, cardamoms, cloves, saffron, onion, ginger, salt, whole black pepper and chiley. The butter and onions are placed in the bottom of the earthen pot; then a layer of rice, over which are distributed more onions, raisins and almonds, sprinkled with saffron in water; then a layer of meat, and so on alternately until the vessel is filled. Butter is then poured over the whole, and the cover of the pot is closed with paste so that no steam may escape. It is placed in an oven and cooked for three hours.—New York Sun.

An Old Marriage Custom.

The people of Lithuania believe in being forearmed for emergency. At least so a curious custom in regard to the marriage ceremony would seem to indicate. It is said that before the marriage is celebrated the mother of the bride gives her daughter a parting maternal box on the ears in the presence of a number of witnesses. The reason for this remarkable proceeding is that if the wife should at any time wish to secure a divorce she would have the plea that physical force was used to make her enter the bonds of matrimony.

Precocity in Hindoo Children.

A traveler who recently visited India states that he was astonished by the precocity of Hindoo children. Many of them are skillful workmen at an age when other children are learning the alphabet. One of the most expert carvers in wood he saw was a boy of 10, and many of the handsomest and most costly rugs are woven by children not yet in their teens.

IOWA'S OLDEST HOUSE

Fort and Scene of Extermination of Brown's Outlaws.

In Iowa, or anywhere in the West, if a building is fifty years old it is venerated as belonging to the dim and hoary past. In Bellevue, Iowa, is a house which was put up in 1837. Work on its destruction was recently completed, and the oldest inhabitants of the town are telling to the youngsters its bloody history. It was the headquarters of as ugly a gang of desperadoes as ever infested a town in the Middle West. W. W. Brown built the house and intended it for a hotel, but no reputable persons ever stopped there. It was two stories high and made of hewn oak studding, with butter-nut weather boards, and the intervening space filled in with brick masonry. So it was well calculated to answer as a fort.

BROWN'S "HOTEL" AT BELLEVUE.

Bellevue put up with Brown and the crimes of his gang—murder, robbery and the like—for three years, and then the best citizens banded together to exterminate the crew. Led by Sheriff Warren, who is still living, and Captain Cox, forty men, armed to the teeth, advanced on the fort one day in the spring of 1840. A call for the surrender of the outlaws was answered by a volley from the house, and the "Bellevue war" began. The posse got into the house and the occupants retreated upstairs, where the assailants could not reach them. The first shot had been fired by Brown himself and he was the first to be killed. The attacking party finding that the outlaws could not be dislodged, prepared to fire the house and smoke or burn them out. This resulted as expected and a score of the gang made a break for liberty, only to be overhauled, and most of them were caught after a severe fight. Thirteen were captured and seven escaped. The loss to the posse was four killed and four wounded. Of the enemy two were killed, including the leader, and several wounded. But that was the end of the gang.

On the premises is an old well, into which it is reputed the bodies of many of Brown's victims were thrown, also a large amount of money, the booty of the gang. The well, however, was filled up years ago and never has been dug out. By the time the contemporaries of Brown had become gray-haired an old fellow wandered into the yard one day and begged that he be allowed to clean out the well. Permission was refused, and it always has been believed that he was the last survivor of the gang, who wanted to recover their ill-gotten gains.

WONDERFUL BOOMERANG FEAT.

Henry Edgren Completely Severed the Head of a Depredating Crow.

Yellow teak wood, when made in the form of a boomerang, is an effective hunting weapon. But even in Australia, the home of the boomerang, few white men know how to handle the deadly curved stick.

Henry Edgren, the Australian hammer-thrower, is an expert boomerang handler, and can bring down most any flying thing at a fairly short range. The last so achievement of this kind was made recently, when Edgren not only succeeded in bringing to earth a depredating crow but severed its head completely from its body, having previously made a wager that he could accomplish this remarkable feat. The bird's head was as neatly cut from the body as if a knife had slashed it.

The Cooking of Game Birds.

Most game birds and animals, because of a life of ceaseless activity, do not take on fat, and such should be larded, or cooked with slices of bacon or salt pork placed on them. Do not serve birds with heads on and undrawn, as is quite generally practiced—the latter point being a relic of savagery, the former an offense to sensitive nerves. It is pleasanter to enjoy a bit of choice flesh without being so forcibly reminded that we are eating dead birds. This is not the only instance where realism is inartistic.—Woman's Home Companion.

He Sells Snakes.

There is a man in Orlando, Fla., who is engaged in a very curious business. He supplies dime museums, side-show people and concerns of that sort with all kinds of live snakes. He always has a large supply of all sorts and sizes on hand.

He keeps his customers informed of the state of the market, and lets them know periodically when he has a new supply. Now and then he publishes a list, giving the current price of rattlesnakes, adders and others, for the value of these creatures varies in accordance with the supply and demand and the time of year.

At present a rattler may be had for from 75 cents to $3.50, according to its size; moccasins, from 50 cents to $1.50. Adders cost from 35 cents to $1; gophers, coachwhips and tree snakes, all the way from 75 cents to $2.50; pines and king snakes, from 75 cents to $2; milk and glass, or joint, snakes, from 75 cents to $1.50. Grass snakes range from 50 cents to $1.

He also sells live alligators, any length from one to eight feet, for from 35 cents to $12. Wood ibis he regards as worth $8 a pair; water turkeys at the same figure; and cormorants at $5 each.

Drink from the cup—never from the saucer.

Teaspoons are left in the saucer, not in the cup.

Making a noise, either in eating or drinking, is vulgar.

Always cheerfully defer to older people and to guests.

Eat slowly, and do not fill the mouth with large quantities.

Eat the food served or quietly leave it on the plate without remark.

Avoid drumming with the fingers or feet; it is the height of impoliteness.

If in doubt at any time as to what is proper follow the example of others of more experience.

Patiently await the coming of your turn; do not follow with the eyes the food served to others.

Never unnecessarily handle the dishes, or in any other way exhibit nervousness or impatience.

Do not feel obliged to "clean up the plate;" especially do not make a laborious display of doing so.

Do not ask for any particular part of a fowl or similar dish unless asked your preference; in that case always indicate some part, and if there really be no choice, designate the portion with which the host can most conveniently render service.—Weekly Bouquet.

Thirty Miles for an Acorn.

Fred A. Ober contributes an article to St. Nicholas entitled, "A Bird's Storehouse; or, the Carpenter Bird." Mr. Ober tells of the California woodpecker that bores holes in trees and then fills them up with acorns. He adds:

Down in Mexico there lives a similar woodpecker, who stores his nuts and acorns in the hollow stalks of the yuccas and magueys. These hollow stalks are separated by joints into several cavities, and the sagacious bird has somehow found this out, and bores a hole at the upper end of each joint, and another at the lower, through which to extract the acorns when wanted. Then it fills up the stalks solidly, and leaves its stores there until needed, safe from the depredations of any other thievish bird or four-footed animal.

The first place in which this curious habit was observed was on a hill in the midst of a desert. The hill was covered with yuccas and magueys, but the nearest oak trees were thirty miles away; and so, it was calculated, these industrious birds had to make a flight of sixty miles for each acorn stowed thus in the stalks!

An observer of birds remarks: "There are several strange features to be noticed in these facts; the provident instinct which prompts the bird to lay by stores of provisions for the winter; the great distance traversed to collect a kind of food unusual for its race; and its seeking, in a place so remote from its natural abode, a storehouse so remarkable."

Can instinct alone teach, or have experience and reason taught these birds that, far better than the bark of trees or crevices in rocks, or any other hiding-place, are these hidden cavities they make for themselves within the hollow stems of distant plants?

This we cannot answer. But we do know that one of the most remarkable birds in our country is this California woodpecker, and that he is well entitled to his Mexican name of El Carpintero—the carpenter bird.

Out of the Mouths of Babes.

"Whose little man are you?" asked the physician of a bright-looking youngster, aged 4, who was playing on the steps of a patient's residence. "I'se mamma's," replied the little fellow; "whose big man is 'ou?"

"Let's play hookey from school today," said the little Chicago boy. "Oh, no," replied his cousin, who had recently removed from Boston, "it's improper to willfully absent ourselves from the institution of learning without the cognizance of the preceptor."

"Johnnie," said the teacher to one of the juvenile class, "in your composition on George Washington you say he cut down a cherry tree with a saw. Don't you know he chopped it down with a hatchet?" "Yes'm," replied Johnnie, "but I couldn't spell hatchet."

"Mamma, have I any children?" asked little 5-year-old Ella upon her return home from Sunday school. "Why, no, of course not! What put that idea into your head?" replied the surprised mother. "Because," answered the little lady, "our lesson to-day was about people's children and their children's children."

A clergyman was in his library one day preparing his Sabbath discourse. He paused frequently to review what he had written and would often erase a word or sentence and substitute another, and his 5-year-old son, who was watching him, asked: "Papa, does God tell you what to preach?" "Certainly, my son," was the reply. "Then why do you scratch it out?" queried the little observer.

Tommy, aged 4, had been taken with a slight attack of prevarication, and his father, wishing to impress upon his infantile mind the sin he had committed, related the story of George Washington and the cherry tree, concluding with the remark that little George was a good boy and he never told a lie. Tommy sat in deep thought for a few moments, and then said: "Say, pa, doesn't 'ittle George talk?"

GAME AS A LUXURY.

Americans Learning that It Has Advantages Over Other Meats.

"In the appreciation of game we have ben more tardy, perhaps, than in other directions," writes Ella Morris Kretschmar in the Woman's Home Companion. "The mechanic, day laborer, the humblest and poorest, in nearly all parts of our land, have ever had at their command a ducal feast. Our very riches have made us indifferent—influenced somewhat by the fact that on all the frontiers, as in 'early times,' in each State game has been of necessity the chief food. It has never, therefore, been a luxury. But traveled Americans, having come to share in the estimate put upon wild meats by the epicures of the world, have so incited good livers at home that game is at a premium in our city markets; and in rural districts appreciation grows as the supply lessens.

"An important point not to be forgotten is that game has the added advantage of being the food for jaded appetites and weakened stomachs. While fully as nourishing, it is more easily digested than other meats.

"In the cooking of game a few essential points must ever be borne in mind. First, and chiefly, that the natural flavors must not be disguised by spices or other pronounced seasonings. There are sauces which bring out the game flavor instead of imparing it, and such only should be used. Let the Frenchman have served to him venison or grouse in form so elaborate that only a naturalist or chef could determine its character; but let us remember that simplicity is the highest art in the cooking of game. Even the accompanying vegetables should be selected with a view to supplementing its flavors—never interfering with them.

"The second point to remember is to guard against overcooking. All game, especially the dark-fleshed, is better in flavor, and digests more easily, rare than well done. It is not necessary to carry this point to the extent affected by gourmets, who eat their game half raw — just well warmed through. Neither should birds, venison, etc., be hung until 'high,' which simply means the beginning of a putrefaction as unwholesome as any other form of decay. But most game meat should be allowed to properly ripen before being cooked. Venison in cold weather may profitably be hung in a dry place for three weeks. Quail, on the other hand, begin to lose in flavor twenty-four hours after being killed."

FEARS OF EUROPE.

Signor Crispi, the former premier of Italy, being now out of office and virtually out of politics, feels at liberty to talk a little more freely than other European statesmen, and accordingly has been giving his views on the war between the United States and Spain with a frankness that reveals some of the inner thoughts of the diplomatists of the Old World, and therefore helps us to understand why in this emergency the sympathies not only of the Italians and the French, but even of the Germans, are on the side of the Spaniards.

Crispi, in discussing the probable outcome of the conflict, conceded the success of the United States and then went on to say: "It is to be feared that the Americans, intoxicated by an easy victory, will throw haphazard all their energy against the European colonies left in their neighborhood. Canada assuredly will be one of their first victims, unless an Anglo-American alliance is established between London and Washington—and that would offer to my mind dangers for the peace of the world."

Abundant evidences exist that the fear of American growth and development as something menacing to the peace of the world is not confined to Crispi. To a greater or less extent it is shared by all Europe. It shows itself in matters of industry and commerce as well as in questions of politics and war. The great nations of the Old World have begun a far-reaching struggle for dominion over the globe, and the contest is already under way in Central Africa and in all parts of Asia.

The combined powers of Continental Europe feel quite capable of driving Great Britain from the field when the time comes for them to act in concord and demand the partition of China, the evacuation of Egypt and the division of Africa, but what if there appear another Richmond in the field? What if the United States, a mightier and stronger nation of Anglo-Saxon blood, rises to take part in the fight?

This possibility of the appearance of the United States as an active competitor in the world for its markets and its powers is what alarms the Caesars of Europe. They cannot be persuaded that the Americans are an unaggressive race. They see our farmers sending produce to undersell European farmers in their own markets. They see our manufacturers gaining trade under the very walls of their own factories. They feel the crushing force of our industrial and commercial competition in their very capitals. Seeing and feeling these things, they are frightened by the prospect of what is to come, and in the new display of our energies to drive Spain from Cuba they behold "a menace to the peace of the world."

Whether there fears are well or ill founded only the future can make certain. The United States at present aims at no conquest. We are quite satisfied with the extent of our territory, and have no thought of aggression, even for the annexation of Canada. We have, nevertheless, been forced into this war, and may be eventually forced into another. Europe, in her aggressive schemes for the partition of the world, has therefore some reason to fear the growing power of the United States.

HAWAIIN ANNEXATION

A question regarding immediate decision is what the United States proposes to do about Hawaii.

While no war existed it was in order to discuss the academic question of whether the United Stares needed Hawaii or not. Now the war is upon us and we must act.

The neutrality laws require that every neutral country shall declare and enforce its neutrality. All over the world this is being hone. Hawaii must soon take the same action which this country is now requiring of Portugal. The Spanish navy is now recruiting at the Cape Verde Islands. By the laws of neutrality, Portugal must order the Spanish fleet to leave her ports within forty-eight hours. If she allows the fleet to remain, she will make herself liable in damages to the United States.

Hawaii stands in the same position as Portugal does. There are two United States vessels, the Mohican and the Bennington, stationed in Honolulu, making that their base of operations. The United States has also located a coaling station at Honolulu, containing some 15,000 tons of coal. If Hawaii declares her neutrality these vessels must leave and all this coal, and all the other United States supplies stored in Honolulu will become unavailable to the United States for use either now or hereafter.

If, on the contrary, Hawaii does not declare her neutrality, she will, by making herself a practical ally of the U. S., give Spain the right to treat her as an enemy, and will also give Spain a claim for damages, if we are allowed to use Honolulu as a recruiting or supply station, upon the same principle that Great Britain was held liable in damages to the United States for allowing the Southern Confederacy to obtain war material in England.

The is no longer any question as to whether the United States need Hawaii as a coaling station. It is absolutely essential that it be secured, and that immediately, not only for the direct uses and purposes of the United States, but in justice to Hawaii. There is no alternative. Hawaii must either be American territory or neutral. Hawaii must either become American territory or the United State must forfeit all right and power to control the only coaling station between Asia and America, without which her naval vessels cannot cross the Pacific.

If Congress does not act in this matter, the President has the power to do so as a war measure. Let the flag go up over Hawaii, and let it remain there.

The Spanish fleet lost three of their best vessels. Two were burned, one blown up and two more totally disabled. The loss of life was on both sides was great.

The first report says that five of the American fleet were sunk. Later advices say two. As the Spanish still hold Manila and the cable, the news of American losses is unreliable.

FROM LONE PINE

LONE PINE, May 3, 1898.

The lower village of Inyo, with the latin inflection in its make up, has of late been disturbed in its habitual quietude by the hoof beats of many bands of famished horses flying from the drouth stricken districts of the far-famed citrus belt. Should our more favored country to the north stand the stress of this influx of stock it may prove an advertisement of our resources which will be appreciated by the seekers for safer homes. Your correspondent witnessed an incident here last week which indicates the necessity for fixing up our code a little. Last Thursday 45 sheep carcasses were taken from the rippling streamlet which supplies the camp with the emblem of purity. If the "nuisance trap" is not already properly set by our State legislators to catch the sheep man, who passes through under protection of his license, and leaves dozens of his sheep piled up in our streams, then let the next solon who represents the 60th district, fix it like the negro's coon trap—"catch 'em comin' and goin'."

The Lone Pine school term closed last Friday. Two pupils, Miss Mattie Johnson and Fred B. Steward taking the examination.

Until about two months ago Prof. Austin had charge of the higher grade, and Mrs. Austin the primary, Since that time Miss Lee Darra's has had the primary and Mrs. Austin the higher grade.

Last night a very creditable entertainment was given by the school. The following program was rendered in good shape:

Cantata—"Quarrel of the flowers"—Mattie Johnson, Eva Julian, Julia Julian, Eva Dearborn, Artie Harvey, Beryl Harvey, Junie Spear, Della Dearborn.

Indian Club Drill—Eva Dearborn, Julia Julian, Artie Harvey, Lutie Harvey.

Conversation on a train—Eddie Ceyla, Oscar Burkhardt, Glady Harry, Julia Julian.

Lost Hat—Eva Dearborn, Lutie Harvey, Frank Lasky, Ernest Stewart.

Judgement of the World—Fred. B. Stewart.

The "Judgment of the World," by Mr. Stewart, showed a peculiar aptness of the author to make the most of his subject. We have grave doubts whether a better view of the "World's Judgment could be given by a candidate for county honors.

Miss Johnson, the other graduate, was the recipient of many compliments for her proficiency in music.

During the most entertaining portion of the program an incident occurred that was not advertised by the management. One of the new fangled seats slipped a cog, leaving an exclamation point in the center, occupied by the old-time merchant of the latin town, nicely bound by his better half on the north, with the bald-headed reporter on the south. To say that this was heartily appreciated by the audience is to draw it mild.

We have heard of burros subsisting on memories of the past, and of editors making three square meals per day out of roller composition, and of making a mule eat shavings by putting green goggles on him, but the following is a tough one, but as we clipped it from a Fresno paper, it must be true:

"Barley is worth $30 a ton and raisins $18. It is difficult to sell good raisins for over $20 per ton. Some time ago I concluded to use raisins as horse feed instead of grain. As an experiment I bought an old horse and fed the animal twelve pounds of raisins per day. The nag was worn out and poor, but in a short time he began to fatten and grow sleek. The food seemed very nourishing, and the horse became plump and full of life. I sold the animal back to the original owner for $30—three times what I gave for him.

"Twelve pounds of raisins a day is equal to twenty pounds of barley. At the present price of grain this would make the food value of raisins about $60 per ton, leaving a profit of $52 a ton over the actual selling price of $18. The raisins also make sood cattle and hog food, but I have not experimented much in that line.

"Horses seem to relish the raisins and keep in good condition while being worked. Several of my neighbors will follow my example and use raisins for stock feed."

AN ALL AROUND FRIEND.

We need not talk about the weather when we come to discuss the cause of so many aches and pains which afflict mankind. Much of these afflictions is from heritage of infirmity of the nerves, muscles and joints of the human body. Many pains and aches, it is true, are brought on by exposure to cold, or by sudden chill, but as a general condition to which we may be subject there should be a remedy which in a general way is curative for all. This is one reason why St. Jacobs Oil is so popular. It cures aches and pains in all forms, and they are wise who keep it steadily on hand to be used in emergencies at any time in the cure of the most acute attacks.

INNOCENT CHILDREN SACRIFICED.

The "slaughter of the innocents" continues until it is estimated that fully one-fourth of the human race die before attaining their fifth birthday, owing, in great measure, to our rigorous and changeable climate. And there are thousands of adults, even in this land of plenty, that stomach, liver and bowel complaints are reducing to confirmed invalidism, whom Hostetter's Stomach Bitters would promptly relieve and invigorate. Malaria, rheumatism and kidney trouble yield to the Bitters.

"Who is that tall man surrounded by the eager crowd?" "That's Gibbs. He is giving 'em his opinion on the scientific phase of his theories advanced for the Maine disaster." "What does he know about it?" "Nothing."

When Longfellow Came to Cambridge.

In 1836, when Lowell was a sophomore, Mr. Longfellow came to Cambridge, a young man, to begin his long and valuable life in the college. His presence there proved a benediction and, I might say, marks an epoch in the history of Harvard. In the first place, he was fresh from Europe, and he gave the best possible stimulus to the budding interest in German literature. In the second place, he came from Bowdoin college, and in those days it was a very good thing for a Harvard undergraduate to know that there were people not bred in Cambridge quite as well read, as intelligent, as elegant and accomplished as any Harvard graduate. In the third place, Longfellow, though he was so young, ranked already distinctly as a man of letters.

This was no broken winded minister who had been made professor. He was not a lawyer without clients or a doctor without patients, for whom "a place" had to be found. He was already known as a poet by all educated people.—Edward Everett Hale in Outlook.

The Water Lily.

Almost everybody has observed the strange characteristic of the water lily bud opening its petals at sunrise and closing them again at sunset. It was for this reason mainly that the ancients held the water lily sacred to the sun. Pliny says: "It is reported that in the Euphrates the flower of the lotus plunges into the water at night, remaining there till midnight, and to such a depth that it cannot be reached with the hand. After midnight it begins gradually to rise, and as the sun rises above the horizon the flower also rises above the water, expands and raises itself some distance above the element in which it grows." It was also through this peculiarity that Hancarville proved that the Egyptians considered the lily an emblem of the world as it rose from the waters of the deep.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

An Epitaph of Pope's.

The following epitaph was highly commended by Johnson. It was written to keep alive the memory of Elizabeth Corbett, who sleeps now in St. Margaret's, Westminster:

Here rests a woman, good without pretense.
Blest with plain reason and with sober sense;
No conquest she but o'er herself desired;
No arts essayed, but not to be admired.
Passion and pride were to her soul unknown,
Convinced that virtue only is our own;
So unaffected, so composed a mind,
So firm, yet soft; so strong, yet so refined,
Heaven, as its purest gold, by tortures tried;
The saint sustained it, but the woman died.

The Money Making Game.

The first of all English games is making money. That is an all absorbing game, and we knock each other down oftener in playing at that than at football or any other rougher sport, and it is absolutely without purpose. No one who engages heartily in that game ever knows why. Ask a great money maker what he wants to do with his money—he never knows. He doesn't make it to do anything with it. He gets it only that he may get it. "What will you make of what you have got?" you ask. "Well, I'll get more," he says. Just as at cricket you get more runs. There's no use in the runs, but to get more of them than other people is the game. And there's no use in the money, but to have more of it than other people is the game. So all that great foul city of London there—rattling, growling, smoking, stinking—a ghastly heap of fermenting brickwork, pouring out poison at every pore—you fancy it is a city of work? Not a street of it! It is a great city of play; very nasty play, and very hard play, but still play. It is only Lord's cricket ground without the turf—a huge billiard table without the cloth, and with pockets as deep as the bottomless pit, but mainly a billiard table after all.—John Ruskin.

SCIENCE AND INVENTION

A £300 check sent by post to a firm in Bristol was thought to have miscarried, until it was discovered that the letter, on being put through the hole in the door by the postman, had been carried off by rats.—London Answers.

Photographs have recently been successfully taken under water at a distance of ten or twelve feet. The camera was carried by a diver, the light was supplied by an electric lamp carried in the diver's headpiece. The experiments were carried out in the bay of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

The surface of the sea is estimated at 150,000,000 square miles, taking the whole surface of the globe at 197,000,000, and its greatest depth supposedly equals the height of the highest mountain, or four miles. The Pacific Ocean covers 78,000,000 square miles, the Atlantic 25,000,000, the Mediterranean 1,000,000.

The trustees of the British Museum have just presented to Glasgaw Corporation, for the museums of the city, cases containing a series of electrotypes of the principal medals illustrative of British history from the days of Henry VIII. down to the close of the Peninsular war and the career of Napoleon Bonaparte.

To the average eye not more than five thousand stars are visible. Some persons having extraordinary strong eyes can see about eight thousand stars. Through the Lick telescope and other powerful instruments about fifty million stars are visible. There are believed to be stars in existence beyond the reach of any telescope yet constructed.

What is believed to have been the largest snake ever contained in the reptile-house of the London Zoological Garden died there last November, after having lived more than twenty years in captivity. It was a python from Malacca, and measured a trifle more than twenty feet in length. Its principal food was ducks, and it was fed, usually, once a week, although sometimes it refused food for a month.

Among the curious inhabitants of Australia are a species of termites called the "meridian ants," because they invariably construct their long, narrow mounds so that the principal axis of the dwelling runs exactly north and south. These mounds are 6 or 8 feet in height, and consist of a series of spires topped with smaller spires, and when viewed end on, they show a remarkable resemblance to a many-spired cathedral.

According to the figures of Monsieur de Fonvielle, the famous French aeronaut, free balloons have attained a height about twice as great as that of any balloon carrying a man. In 1894 Mr. Berson ascended in a balloon to the immense elevation of 30,000 feet; but since then a free balloon, carrying self-recording instruments capable of registering the height attained, has reached an elevation of 60,000 feet—more than double the height of Mount Everest, the loftiest mountain in the world.

The number of firms throughout the whole United States which are daily replacing belted plants, in which or in part, with electric motors is steadily increasing. In another year or two, says Cassier's Magazine, when the present unorganized struggle for precedence in such work will have settled down, it will be found that electricity has become as indispensable in the machine shop as it now is in the lighting and suburban transportation fields. Indeed, as electric lighting plants increase, so will the tendency to run small shops by electricity grow, because the lighting companies will ask nothing better than to sell power during hours when the greater part of their plant would otherwise be lying idle.

Promoted for Gallantry.

Hon. Theodore Roosevelt writes an article entitled "The Roll of Honor of the New York Police," for the Century. Mr. Roosevelt says:

Early in our term we promoted a patrolman to the grade of roundsman for activity in catching a burglar under rather peculiar circumstances. I happened to note his getting a burglar one week. Apparently he had fallen into the habit, for he got another the next week. In the latter case the burglar escaped from the house soon after midnight, and ran away towards Park avenue, with the policeman in hot chase. The New York Central Railroad runs under Park avenue, and there are a succession of openings in the top of the tunnel. Finding that the policeman was gaining on him, the burglar took a desperate chance, and leaped down one of these openings, at the risk of breaking his neck. Now the burglar was running for his liberty, and it was the part of wisdom for him to imperil life or limb; but the policeman was merely doing his duty, and nobody could have blamed him for not taking the jump. However, he jumped; and in this particular case the hand of the Lord was heavy upon the unrighteous. The burglar had the breath knocked out of him, and the "cop" didn't. When his victim could walk the officer trotted him around to the station-house, and a week afterward he himself was promoted, it appearing, upon careful investigation, that he was sober, trustworthy, and strictly attentive to his duty.

All Our Chalk from England.

One of the few exclusively important imported British products used in our country is chalk. It comes from the banks of the River Thames, being obtainable nowhere else in large quantities. In its crude form, remarkable flint fossils are sometimes found, usually the remains of fish. The process of manufacture from the natural state to that of a form when it can be utilized is simple. When received at the mill the chalk is put into great machines and ground in water, then floated off into vats of water, where all the impurities and foreign substances are precipitated, the water being afterward drawn off by a series of filtering operations, and the soft residuum dried by steam heat and exposure to the air; the substance is then reduced to a powder of different degrees of fineness by grinding in burr mills and belting, when it is ready to be packed in barrels and shipped for use, among the largest consumers being the rubber goods manufacturers; rubber, in its crude state, being sticky, unmanageable and available only for very simple purposes, becomes vulcanized and hardened by adding to it chalk while it is hot, thus rendering it suitable for the various uses to which it is put. As is also well known, a large quantity of chalk is employed in the preparation of paint and putty, being termed whiting when in this form.

DRIVING DOG TEAMS.

Great Dexterity of the Drivers in the Use of the Whip.

Well, here we are down on the ice, and the dogs impatient to start. Let me describe. The sled consists of a narrow box four feet long, the front half being covered or boxed in, mounted on a floor eight feet long resting on runners. In this box the passenger sits, wrapped in rabbit skins so that he can hardly move, his head and shoulders only projecting. In front and behind and on top of the box is placed all the luggage, covered with canvas and securely lashed, to withstand all the jolting and possible upsets, and our snowshoes within easy reach.

An important item is the dogwhip, terrible to the dog if used by a skillful hand and terrible to the user if he be a novice; for he is sure to half strangle himself or to hurt his own face with the business end of the lash. The whip I measured had a handle nine inches long and lash thirty feet, and weighed four pounds. The lash was of folded and plaited seal hide, and for five feet from the handle measured five inches round, then for fourteen feet it gradually tapered off, ending in a single thong half an inch thick and eleven feet long. Wonderful the dexterity with which a driver can pick out a dog and almost a spot on a dog with this lash. The lash must be trailing at full length behind, when a jerk and turn of the wrist cause it to fly forward, the thick part first, and the tapering end continuing the motion till it is at full length in front, and the lash making the fur fly from the victim. But often it is made to crack over the heads of the dogs as a warning.

The eleven dogs were harnessed to the front of the sled, each by a separate thong of seal hide, all of different lengths, fastened to a light canvas harness. The nearest dog was about fifteen feet from the sled, and the leader, with bells on her, about fifty feet, the thongs thus increasing in length by about three feet. When the going is good the dogs spread out like the fingers of a hand, but when the snow is deep they fall into each other's tracks in almost single file. As they continually cross and recross each other, the thongs get gradually plaited almost up to the rearmost dog, when a halt is called, the dogs are made to lie down and the driver carefully disentangles them, taking care that no dog gets away meanwhile. They are guided by the voice, using "husky" (that is, Eskimo) words: "Owk," go to the right; "arrah," to the left; and "holt," straight on. But often one of the men must run ahead on snowshoes for the dogs to follow him.—London (Ont.) Times.

Had the Right of Way.

A party of Clevelanders were strolling through a meadow that is a part of an attractive lake shore establishment not long ago, when a pretty white and black animal crossed the pathway. The guide of the party, the daughter of the house, was some distance in the rear when the little creature put in an appearance.

"What a pretty kitty!" said one of the girls.

"Isn't it?" said the nearest young man.

The pretty kitty ran ahead a little ways and then halted as if waiting for the party to come up.

"Isn't she tame?" said the girl.

"Awfully tame," replied the young man. "Shall I catch it for you?"

"Oh, do."

Then the young woman called back to the hostess:

"Is this your kitty, Laura?"

The hostess looked up, she saw the young man starting forward, she saw the white and black creature, her face looked apoplectic, she gasped for words.

"Co-come back!" she shrieked. "Mercy! mercy run for your life! Run! run!"

And she set the example by picking up her skirts and racing toward the house. The rest caught the panic and chased after her, leaving the white and black creature master of the situation.

"What was it, Laura?" cried one of the young women, "snakes?"

"Wo-worse that that!" panted the hostess. "It was a—a Mephitis Americanis!"

And the young men looked as if they knew what she meant, but the women vainly wondered.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Glasgow's Family Home.

Among the many new things started by the Glasgow corporation is a "family home." It is intended mainly for widowers and widows who go out to work. There are one hundred bedrooms, each of which contains a good bed for the father or mother and a broad cot for the younger children. For these rooms the parents pay five shilling six pence a week, and that sum includes the lighting, heating and cleaning of them. Clean linen is supplied once a week. In the home, also, there are dining, recreation and nursery rooms. The children are looked after and cared for while the parents are at work for an infinitesimal sum. The cooking, washing and bathing arrangements are excellent, and as the thing is done on a large scale and economically arranged the establishment is expected to pay for itself. Glasgow benevolence is nothing if not practical, and this new home seems a most admirable institution.

The Whirligig of Time.

Mary had a little lamb,
Its fleece was white as snow,
And everywhere that Mary went
The lamb was sure to go.

Its fleece is still as white as snow,
But Mary's lamb has grown,
And now she'd rather walk three miles
Than face that lamb alone.
—Truth.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Joys and Sorrows.—Joys are the more satisfactory when they come as surprises. Sorrows are the more heroically met when they come unannounced.—Rev. U. S. Milburn, Universalist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Germ of Punishment.—All sin has in its nature the germ of punishment. There must be punishment as long as there is sin in the universe. If there is sin forever then there must be punishment forever.—Rev. W. G. Partridge, Baptist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The World's Greatest Work.—When we contemplate Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world, it is one of the greatest thoughts that can come to man. It far outreaches every other work or scheme that has ever been undertaken by man.—Rev. P. C. Curwick, Methodist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Dead Men.—Men are dead to the noble principles of home. They are dead to the great interest of saving the lost; dead to the splendid virtues that go to make up character that will stand the test when storms rage and wild winds wail.—Rev. G. W. Perryman, Baptist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Reward.—Those who live nobly here need not worry about the hereafter. They will share in the best of the future. Dr. Friedman, Hebrew, Denver, Colo.

Burdens.—Burden bearing enables a man to do two things—to test his strength and by using to increase it.—Rev. W. S. Perkins, Universalist, Meriden, Conn.

Happiness.—The average of happiness is not as high as it ought to be or as high as it will be. Man's capacity for happiness in this life has not yet been realized.—Rev. G. B. Vosburgh, Baptist, Denver, Colo.

Puritanism.—We are still wrapped up in Puritanism. Grand as the Puritan principles were, they are not enough. It is time to know that no man can call Christ his and forget his neighbor.—Rev. W. S. Rainsford, Episcopalian, New York City.

Restlessness.—If there is any disorder in our lives we trace it to restlessness. What makes unrest? Pride, ambition, selfishness—when we feel slighted or are disappointed in anything, then peace flies.—Rev. G. Roughton, Methodist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Municipal Government.—The government of cities is truly a present-day question. They will continue to increase. The drift of multitude is toward them—a drift greatly to be deplored.—Rev. H. C. Swentzel, Episcopalian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Eternal Fortune.—Every man is the architect of his eternal fortune. The divine constitution of our nature put it into our power to have a heaven or hell on earth in our own heart.—Rev. M. C. Peters, Independent, N. Y.

Scandal.—When people talk about their neighbors, you are not able to tell always what kind of people these neighbors are, but you can judge very accurately as to what kind of people they themselves are.—Rev. Washington Gladden, Columbus, O.

Heavenward.—The march of the soul heavenward is always a morning march, where each experience is only a prophecy of better things to come. The royal road in literature, in reform, in art, in religion is the sunrise route.—Rev. C. T. Brown, Congregationalist, Salt Lake City, Utah.

WOUND THE FIRST SPOOL

Lebanon, Ill., Woman Wound the First Thread in This Country.

In Lebanon, Ill., lives Martha Little Davidson, who wound the first spool of thread ever wound in this country. It was in 1844, at Dracut, Mass., that the industry which has since made fortunes for great firms humbly began. Martha had a record as a "spooler" in her own home in Scotland. She never wound more nor less than the "warranted 200 yards" upon a spool and she never made mistakes in keeping her accounts of thread wound. So that she and her sister were esteemed valuable enough professors of the thread industry to be imported to America when the business here was in its infancy. The Davidson girls were associated with the beginning of the thread industry in New Jersey, and Martha's sister married one of the Semples, who were thread magnates at Mount Holly years ago.

MARTHA DAVIDSON.

A Magnetic Island.

In the Baltic, the Danish island Bornholm, which is situated about twenty-four miles, east by south, from the nearest point of Sweden, may be regarded as a huge magnet. Although the power of this magnetic island is not so great that it can draw the nails out of ships, as was told of the legendary magnetic hills, the magnetism of the rocks on the Island of Bornholm can and does cause a good deal of trouble to ships in quite another way, for the island exerts such an influence on the magnetic needle that it causes a vessel to turn perceptibly aside from its course. The effect of the island magnetism is felt at a distance of 15 kilometers, or about nine and one-half miles.

Growth of the City of Boston.

The city of Boston, which now has a population of over 500,000, had in 1820, two years prior to the adoption of the city charter, 43,298 inhabitants. Seventy-five years ago East Boston, Charlestown, Roxbury, Dorchester, West Roxbury and Brighton were separate communities, East Boston not being annexed until 1836, Roxbury until 1867, Dorchester until 1869 and Charlestown, Brighton and West Roxbury until 1873. Furthermore, in 1882, the great Back Bay territory had not been reclaimed from the waters of the inner harbor, and the new commonwealth lands in South Boston were not in existence.

The letter-carrier's whistle might be termed a postal note.

American Drug Shops.

During the seventeenth century the druggist came to America and closely followed English precedents, modifying them, however, by the practice of the Indians with whom he came in contact. Quack apothecaries began to spring up in the new land, and in 1636 the colony of Virginia passed a law which among other things regulated the prices and fees of the druggist. At this time it was fashionable for the druggists to practice surgery in addition to pharmacy, and the Virginia colony contained a large number of people who were proficient in both professions. In Massachusetts the business was largely in the hands of Indians, schoolmasters, old women and teachers. The Salem witchcraft delusion retarded the spread of the druggist for some time in the Bay State, for the popular impression fastened on the apothecaries a suspicion that they sold the potions that were supposed to produce the spells. Among those who suffered persecution at this time mixers of medicine appear to have been prominent.

The drug shop had not yet become a distinct institution. It was usually a branch of the grocery or spice business. In 1647 one Giles Forman of Boston had, however, firmly established himself as devoting special attention to pharmacy. In 1646 the first distinctive drug store in America was opened in Boston by William Davies. No doubt more reliance was placed on drugs then than now, when people are beginning to recognize the large part that fresh air, dietetics and other hygienic measures play in the successful treatment of disease.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Not His Province.

The New England ministers of early days were expected to preserve an aspect grave to the verge of solemnity on all occasions, not only on Sundays, but week days as well. If they possessed a sense of humor, it sometimes made itself evident even in the midst of devotional exercises.

One New Hampshire parish was guarded and guided by a quaint speaking elderly man, who had a slight lisp. He was fond of outdoor work of almost every sort and was an able farmer as well as preacher, but all domestic matters he relegated to his wife.

One day the old traveling baker seeing the minister at work in the field, drew rein, and when the jingling of his horse's bells had subsided he called out, "Any crackers wanted today, parson?"

The minister raised his head and surveyed the baker from under his shaggy eyebrows. No smile of greeting crossed his solemn face.

"Abraham in the field," he responded gravely. "Tharah (Sarah) in the tent," and without another word he resumed his hoeing and left the baker to digest his Biblical reproof and drive on to the house to find out if "Sarah" would buy any of his wares.—Youth's Companion.

The Japanese government issues every day three weather charts, which include observations in China and the Lin-Kiu islands, enabling captains to ascertain the movements of storms several days in advance.

A Wonderful Statement

From Mrs. J. S. McGillas, of 113 Kilburn Avenue, Rockford, Ill.

"I was dreadfully ill—the doctors said they could cure me, but failed to do so.

"I gave up in despair and took to my bed. I had dreadful pains in my heart, fainting spells, sparks before my eyes, and sometimes I would get so blind I could not see for several minutes. I could not stand very long without feeling sick and vomiting.

I also had female weakness, inflammation of ovaries, painful menstruation, displacement of the womb, itching of the external parts, and ulceration of the womb. I have had all these complaints.

"The pains I had to stand were something dreadful. My husband told me to try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine, which I did, and after taking it for a while, was cured."

AS YE WOULD.

If I should see
A brother languishing in sore distress,
And I should turn and leave him comfortless
When I might be
A messenger of hope and happiness,
How could I ask to have what I denied
In my own hour of bitterness supplied?

If I might sing
A little song to cheer a fainting heart,
And I should seal my lips and sit apart
When I might bring
A bit of sunshine for life's ache and smart,
How could I hope to have my grief relieved
If I kept silent when my brother grieved?

And so I know
That day is lost wherein I fail to lend
A helping hand to some wayfaring friend,
But if it show
A burden lightened by the cheer I send,
Then do I hold the golden hours well spent
And lay me down to sleep in sweet content.

A STROKE OF LUCK.

DEACON WADE was hoeing in the garden, close by the road, on the morning when the idea came to him that it would be a good plan for him to get married again.

The way in which the idea came to him was this: Just as he reached the end of the row nearest the road, some one said: "Good morning, Deacon Wade," in a voice that made him think of blackbirds and bobolinks, and he looked up, to see Rhoda Mason smiling over the fence at him.

"Good morning, good morning," responded the deacon, delightedly. "Beautiful morning, isn't it?"

"Charming," answered Rhoda. "How's Mrs. Wheelock? Well, I suppose?"

"She's gone over to her son's again," answered the deacon. "She went yesterday—some of the children sick, I believe—so Bob and I are keeping house alone. I'm getting about tired of it, and so's Bob. He was telling me, this morning, that he thought it would be a good idea for one of us to hunt up a new housekeeper; and I don't know but he was right."

Pretty Rhoda's face got as rosy as the blossoms on the damask rose-bush by the gate. The deacon wondered why he had never noticed how pretty she was before.

"I see you've got a fine crop of strawberries," said Rhoda, pretending to be greatly interested in the long rows of ripening fruit. "Ours are a failure this year. Mother said she didn't believe we'd have enough for a shortcake."

"I want to know!" exclaimed the deacon. "That's too bad, I declare. We'll have more than we can use, and I'll bring you over some just as soon as they're ripe enough to pick."

"Thank you, ever so much," responded Rhoda. "I know mother'll be glad to get them. But I must be going, or I won't get back by dinner-time," and she went her way, leaving the deacon with a new idea in his head.

"I s'pose folks would say it was foolish for an old fellow like me to marry a young girl like Rhoda," he said to himself, as he turned back on the next row of sweet corn. "But other men, older than I am, marry young wives; so why shouldn't I? We need a good housekeeper here. It's getting so we can't depend on Mrs. Wheelock. She's gone half the time, and we're likely to lose her altogether, almost any time. Of course, folks 'll say that Bob ought to get married instead of me; but he don't seem to have any idea of it, and I can't put the idea in his head. Rhoda's a great deal younger than I am; but she's a sensible girl, and I'm sure she'd make a good wife. I wonder why I never thought of it before?"

The more the deacon thought of it the more in earnest he got. On Saturday he picked a basket of luscious strawberries, and that afternoon he took them over to the Mason homestead.

"I declare, if I ain't rather excited," said the deacon, as he neared Rhoda's home, and felt his heart beating quick and hard. "I thought I'd got over that years ago. If I feel this way now, how'll I feel when I get there? Of course, I'm not going to propose to her right away. I'll just kind o' hint at matters and things, enough to set her to thinking. 'Tain't best to be in too great a hurry about such things."

Rhoda was sitting on the front porch, shelling peas. Pretty as she had looked that morning in the roadside, she looked far prettier to-day, the deacon thought.

"O, you've brought those berries you promised us, haven't you?" cried Rhoda. "It's so kind of you. Mother was delighted when I told her what you were going to do. I'm so sorry she isn't at home this afternoon. She went to call on Mrs. Perkins—she's sick, you know. But come in and sit down, and maybe she'll be back before you go. I hope she will, for I know she'll be real disappointed to miss your visit."

"O, that's nothing," said the deacon. "I—I can come over again, you know."

"I wish you would," said Rhoda. "Mother was saying that you weren't very neighborly. She didn't remember when you'd been here."

"I—I want to see your mother and have a good, long talk with her about—about an idea I've got," said the deacon, by-and-by. "She knows how much we need a housekeeper, and I always thought her a very sensible woman, and I'm sure she'd think just as I do about—about this idea of mine. At least, I hope so. I suppose she'd feel able to carry on the housework on a place like this alone, wouldn't she? She seems strong and healthy as ever."

"O, yes, mother'd manage that all right," answered Rhoda. "She often tells me she don't need any of my help."

"She got the idea, plain enough," thought the deacon, in great delight, as Rhoda said that. "I'm getting along splendidly. She's the most sensible girl I ever saw. I wonder how much farther I better go now? Maybe I'd better wait, just as I'd made up my mind to, an' give her time to talk it over with her mother before I come right out with the question. I will," and it was well that he came to this decision, and adhered to it, as he congratulated himself a few days later.

The deacon might have staid until Mrs. Mason's return, but a young girl friend of Rhoda's came, and that put an end to his visit.

"You can talk with your mother and see what she thinks about what I've been saying," he said, as he took his departure. "Let me know the first change you have."

The next Wednesday evening Robert Wade was away from home. About 1 o'clock his father heard him come in.

"I wouldn't wonder if Rob's got an idea of sparking somebody," thought the deacon. "Maybe it's like the measles—when it gets into the family, they all have it," and he chuckled to think his son might have caught the disease from him. "Well, Rob's a good boy, and I hope he'll do as well in getting a wife as I shall, if I get Rhoda Mason."

The next morning Rob looked very wise as he sat down to breakfast opposite his father.

"I've got a message for you," he said, by-and-by, when the housekeeper had left the room. "I was over to the Mason place, and when I came away Rhoda told me to tell you that if you wanted to know what her mother thought about your housekeeping idea you'd better come over and talk with her about it. I was quite surprised to find out you'd got matrimonial ideas in your head, but I want to say that I think the plan a most sensible one. Mrs. Mason would make you a tip-top housekeeper, and—if you'll take the mother, I'll take the daughter. Indeed, I've made an arrangement to that effect. Rhoda and I came to a satisfactory understanding last night." It was well for the deacon that the housekeeper came in just at this juncture. Rob went out, and he betook himself to his room to collect his bewildered senses.

"I begin to understand it," he told himself, by-and-by. "I've come dreadfully near making a fool of myself. I guess I did make a fool of myself, all right enough; but what I mean is, I came dreadfully near getting caught at it. But, by the greatest stroke of luck that ever happened to me, I haven't been caught. I see how it is. Rob's going to marry Rhoda, and he's been sparking her all along, and the girl thought I knew it, and she thinks it was her mother I had in view for a housekeeper. And, as luck would have it, I didn't say anything that'll give me away, if—if I carry out the deception and marry Rhoda's mother. If I don't they'll mistrust something. It seems as if fate had something to do with it. I never thought of such a thing, but I'm forced right into it, so to speak. I can't help myself. And, come to think of it, it's the proper thing to do. It would have been a foolish thing for an old man like me to marry a young girl like Rhoda. Ain't it lucky, now, that I didn't say any more that day? I stopped just at the right time and place. It seems she's told her mother what I said, and—I'm to come over and talk with her about it. I will."

When Deacon Wade made up his mind to anything he was prompt to act. Saturday afternoon saw him setting out for the Mason homestead with another basket of strawberries. The widow was at home this time, and welcomed him with a blush that made her look almost as pretty as her daughter.

"Take a seat out on the porch, deacon, where it's cool," said the widow. "And I'll sit here and hull the berries while we visit. Rob's coming over, by-and-by, Rhoda said, and both of you must stay to tea. I remember how fond you used to be of shortcake, and we'll have one that'll make you think of old times."

"Robert," said the deacon, as his son came up the path, about 5 o'clock, "I want to exchange congratulations with you. You've got the promise of the daughter and I've got the promise of the mother. I think both of us deserve congratulations. We're in luck, my boy."

"That's about the way I look at it," said Robert, giving the blushing Mrs. Mason a rousing kiss. Just then Rhoda appeared on the scene to announce that tea was waiting, and the deacon stepped up to her and kissed her in a most fatherly manner, and then put her hand in Robert's, and said: "Bless you, my children," in most approved stage fashion.

"But wasn't I lucky, though, to get off so easy," he said to himself, more than once after that, as he thought over his narrow escape. "It makes me shiver to think how near I came to being found out for an old fool. But, by the greatest stroke of luck I ever had, I come out of the scrape all right, and got just the kind of a wife that I ought to have. I shall always believe in luck after this."—New York Ledger.

A Use for English Sparrows.

The crusade against the killing of out song-birds cannot but receive the indorsement of every right-minded woman. We are all ready to join Audubon societies, and to help in every way to keep our forests peopled with beauty and tuneful with song. But there is a little rowdy fellow beyond the pale of our sympathies—that wicked little fighter, the English sparrow. Individually he is harmless enough, but collectively he is capable of the greatest mischiefs. The extermination of our song birds is apparently the chief aim of his existence. We can never forgive him, but our wrath against him should be mollified because of his one redeeming point—he is good in pie. "Four and twenty" of him would reproduce that matchless dish of nursery fame. Under the alias of "reed-bird" he is constantly sold in our markets, and praised by purchasers in the final act of disposing of him. So let us enjoy sparrow pie in and out of season, since we may do so without a moral twinge, and indeed feel that we are doing society a service.—Woman's Home Companion.

The History of Tailoring.

At a dinner of the Tailor's Society in London Mr. Skinner, of Glasgow, graphically traced the development of the tailor's art from primeval times, when they stitched fig leaves together, until the present day, when the anxiety of so many is "wherewithal shall I be clothed." He said the introduction of the sewing machine marked a new era in the art of tailoring. In 1755 one Weisenthal invented a double-pointed needle with an eye in the middle. From this small beginning progress was made, until in 1830 B. Thimonier patented a sewing machine in Paris. In 1841 there were eighty of these machines in use for sewing the clothing of the French army. But a mob of furious operatives destroyed these machines, just as similar mobs had before that day destroyed the Jacquard loom and Hargreaves spinning jenny. During the revolution of 1848 Thimonier was again at work with other machines, capable of making 200 stitches a minute. But once again the mob got at them and destroyed them, and poor Thimonier died in the direst poverty in the year 1857. Before that date, however, Elias Howe, of Massachusetts, had perfected the sewing machine, but, meeting with no encouragement in the United States, he came to England, and in 1846 sold his machine to a merchant of Cheapside for £250. From that time onward the history of the sartorial art is largely a history of the sewing machine.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Claim Long Pedigrees.

In a genealogical way the funniest thing on record is that Menelik, Negus of Abyssinia, insists on his descent in a straight line from Solomon and the renowned Queen of Sheba. If this should be questioned the august Negus would have your head cut off, or if you hinted that there was a bar sinister somewhere you might be impaled. There is, however, a noble family in France, the Counts of Noe, who show on their blazon the Ark and the most adventurous voyager, Noah, and they claim that veteran seaman as really their remote ancestor.

SUBMARINE MINES.

What These Destructive Forces Are and How They Are Exploded.

Submarine mines have been much talked of since the Maine disaster, but comparatively few persons know anything about the laying or operating of these destructive forces, or of their uses. Mines were used extensively by the Confederates during the civil war, and the Germans made good use of them in keeping the French fleet from bombarding her ports during the Franco-Prussian war. Great improvements have been made recently, however, and the introduction of high explosives for use instead of gunpowder has greatly increased the power and defensive range of mines. These mines are solely for harbor defense and are particularly useful in this country. With an extensive coast and many large seaports, a country like this must resort to every possible means to keep the enemy beyond bombarding distance. This latter function may, in many cases, be performed by submarine mines alone. Foreign battleships draw from twenty to thirty feet of water. They cannot maneuver recklessly in entering the ship channels leading to our seaports, but they must stick to the middle of the channel if they enter at all. When, therefore, the outer entrance to the ship channel is beyond bombarding distance of a city it may be possible to plant such a system of mines that an enemy cannot pass.

ELECTRO-CONTACT MINE.

EXPLOSION OF 100 POUNDS OF MORTAR POWDER.

There are several kinds of submarine mines. The simplest form is the contact mine, which consists of an iron case (A), containing the explosive charge, and a cable (C) attaching it to the sinker (D), by which it is held in place. The case (A) has a number of projecting points (B), each armed with a firing pin. If a ship hits one of these firing pins the latter will be driven in, exploding a percussion cap, and the charge will then burst. The distance of the charge (A) below the surface must be so regulated that it may not be too near the surface when the tide is low, nor too far below the surface when the tide is high. An immersion of at least eight feet is necessary to give the charge the force to destroy a modern ship.

A CONTACT MINE.

The "electro-contact mine" is constructed on the same general plan as the contact mine, but some of the weaknesses of the latter are removed. The firing pins (B), instead of exploding a percussion cap when driven in, simply close one break in an electric circuit passing through the charge. There is an electric cable (C, C,) leading from the charge to the anchor (D), and thence to the station on shore, where there is another break in the electric firing circuit. Unless this latter break in the circuit is also closed at the shore station the firing pin, when driven in, will not explode the mine. Herein is an element of safety to friendly ships. When no enemy is in sight and friendly ships are passing in and out, the break is left open at the shore station, so that a mine if struck will not explode.

SCHOONER BLOWN UP BY TORPEDO.

The contact, electro-contact and observation mines can only be used in comparatively shoal water and in places where the current is not very strong. When the depth of water is considerable, or when the current is rapid, "ground mines"—heavy mines similar in construction to the others, but resting on the bottom—must be used. Ground mines have been planted in sixty-five feet of water. For this depth a charge of about 1,200 pounds of guncotton, equivalent to 4,800 pounds of gunpowder, should be used. The method of firing the ground mine is very simple and ingenious. The mine is held in position on or near the ground by a heavy anchor or sinker. Two observers are usually employed to determine when the enemy is directly over the mine. The mine is then exploded by means of electric cables.

High explosives like guncotton, dynamite or explosive gelatine are used in submarine mines at present. They are superior to gunpowder in that they are not seriously affected by moisture. A leak in the case containing the charge will not render it useless, as would be the case with gunpowder mines. Besides, the high explosives are from four to six times as powerful as gunpowder. The pressure necessary to blow a hole through the double bottom of a modern ship has been estimated to be between 6,000 and 12,000 pounds per square inch.

The important function of the submarine mine defense is to check the first advance of a naval enemy against a seaport, thus giving the defenders time to concentrate their ships to meet the attack.

An Instrument of War.

The bagpipe, whose stirring music fired the blood of the Gordon Highlanders as they scaled the heights of Dargai, enjoys, though it is not generally known, the unique distinction of having been declared by a court of law to be "an instrument of war." In an early volume of the Scots Magazine we find it reported that on the 15th November, 1746, a James Reid, of Angus, was tried for taking part in the rebellion. It was proved for his defense that he had never carried arms of any kind, but, on the other hand, it was shown that he had for some time officiated as a piper in a Highland regiment. It is not unlikely that he had been pressed into the service, for we are told "he behaved very devoutly, prayed fervently, and sang part of a psalm." Notwithstanding these most untraditional piper traits, however, the court found poor Reid guilty of high treason, and sentenced him to suffer the punishment which that crime involved. It was held that a "Highland regiment never marched without a piper, and, therefore, his bagpipes in the eye of the law was an instrument of war." There is little wonder, in the face of such a decision, that Pennant when he came north later in the century found the "bagpipes becoming scarce."

Li and the Woman Doctor.

Li Hung Chang's visit to England is said to have had the most beneficial effect on the destinies of women in China. Since his return he has appointed the first Chinese lady practicing medicine in her own land to be physician to the women of his household. Two delegates, Miss Wang and Dr. Eng, are to represent the Celestial empire at the women's congress in London in 1898. The latter is the daughter of a mandarin who was converted to Christianity and graduated in an American university; and she obtained the degree of doctor of medicine at the Women's Medical College, Philadelphia. She has been so successful in the healing art that she is now known as the miracle lady.—St. James Gazette.

THE RAM KATAHDIN.

The Powerful U. S. Turtle-back Ship Recently Placed in Commission.

The belief prevails among naval officers that in a naval fight the country would be electrified with the havoc caused among the enemy's fleet by such a vessel as the Katahdin. No modern vessel of this kind has ever been used in actual warfare, and, in fact, the Katahdin is about the only craft of her kind in the world. She resembles the old-style ram Merrimac only in the use of armor, the employment of steam power and the pointed steel prow.

The Katahdin has a length on the load water line of 250.9 feet and her beak or ram, which is below the water line, gives her an extreme length of about 254 feet. Other statistics of the vessel are: Displacement under normal coal supply, 2,155; tonnage, 582; extreme breadth, 43.5 feet; mean draught, 15 feet; indicated horse power, 5,068; speed, 16.11 knots; capacity of coal bunkers, 192.70 tons. The Katahdin is propelled by twin screws. Her full complement consists of 90 men.

The most peculiar feature of the Katahdin is her concealment under water. Only her smooth turtle back, covered with armor plate and surmounted simply by a small conning tower and a smokestack are visible. The tower is made of steel 18 inches thick, and unless squarely hit by a heavy shot at close range, is proof against any attack. Aside from her dangerous sharp beak of steel and her covering of armor plate the Katahdin is equipped with slight means of offensive or defensive character. She carries four six-pound, rapid-firing guns, which are intended as defense against torpedo boats or boarders. Her speed is low, hardly higher than that of a battleship; but with her tremendous momentum and powerful propelling force behind a sharp steel prow the Katahdin is calculated to do a lot of mischief among the enemy's fleet. The ram, being situated below the water line, is directed at the most vulnerable part of a battleship or cruiser, where armor is either thin or altogether wanting.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, MAY 13 1898

Call. In an address delivered on the presentation of a battle flag to a company of Indiana volunteers on Tuesday, ex-President Harrison said: "We may justly, I think, in the West Indies and in the Far Easrern seas, where our gallant navy has won so splendid a victory, hold some little unpeopled harbors where our cruising warships may coal and find a refuge when in stress."

Mr. Harrison, while not in office, holds so high a position in the politics of the country that this statement may be taken as a tentative expression designed to feel the pulse of the people on the important and far-reaching question as to what is to be done by the United States with the Spanish colonies in the Wes Indies and in the Orient. Cuba will of course pass into the hands of the Cubans themselves as soon as they can organize a governmen capable of maintaing itself and establishing law, but what shall be done with Porto Rico and the Phillipines?

The latter group involves the more serious question of the two. In the Phillipine archipelago there are upward of 1200 islands, of which about 400 are large enough to sustain permanent populations. The total number of inhabitants is in round numbers 7,000,000. Of these the greater number are Malays. There are a few Spanish, hardly more industrious or enterprising than the natives, and the industry and commerce of the group is mainly in the hands of Chinese.

In 1894 the total imports of the group amounted in value to $28,530,000, and the exports to $3,250,000, both measured in Mexican coin, which is the prevailing standard of the country. The real wealth of the islands has, however, never been developed. It is known that gold and coal exist in the mountains of some of the larger islands, but they have not been mined or extensively exploited by reason of a lack of transportation. In the hands of an energeric race the group could be made one of the richest colonial possessions on the globe.

The occupation of port of refuge and coaling station in the archipelago by our Government would inevitably imply an american protectorate over the whole. Our responsibilities would increase from year to year, and our exercise of power would have to increase with them. In colonial affairs as well as in all other matter in this world the law of evolution prevails. Whence once a thing has been started it either advances or retires—dies or grows. Spain's colonial power is dying; that of the United States stands waiting the decision of the people in this c 1898.

What shall be done with the Phillipines is a question whose answer involves not only present conditions and American interests, but the whole course of our future history and the affairs of the world. It is an issue not to be settled lighly, and it is even possible that the settlement may not be left to our untrammeled will. It not infrequently happens that even the greatest and strongest nations are sometimes compelled by circumstances to go forward when they would prefer to stand still.

Reno, Nev., May 6, 1898.—Key West. Two prizes. Spanish fishing schooners, brought in to-day. The Minneapolis captured the French steamer La Fayette after an exciting chase. She tried to run the blockade after being warned and was captured. The chase was participated in by Minneapolis, Newport, Norvel and Wilmington. Complications with France may arise regarding capture. Orders from Washington as to disposition of cargo and passengers eagerly awaited. Claimed she carried Spanish soldiers in guise of passengers. No news from Dewey. Navy Department is uneasy.

Seven transports are now at Tampa to convey troops to Cuba. News of Dewey's victory received with enthusiasm. Members of squadron before Havana are wild to bombard.

The pope has assured the Queen of his support and his influence for pacific settlement of trouble.

Dewey's official report filed. It reads. Entire Spanish fleet of eleven vessels destroyed. Spanish loss, dead 300; wounded 400. Dewey's loss is 6 men injured. His fleet is uninjured.

6 p.m. Dewey's message is short. He is caring for Spanish in hoshis lines, and has protection to forts.

ops will be sent to the Phillipines May 15.

Dewey has not force enough to land.

Rioting continues in Madrid. Feared dynasty be overthrown.

May 9—Madrid — Queen yesterday held conference-

Instructions are to resist to death.

Dewey elected rear-admiral. He will be presented with a sword by the men of his command.

May 10—A special from Shanghai says that Admiral Montijo was killed by the populace after leaving Cavite. Massacres are said to have occurred outside Manila. Insurgents are killing women and children.

A Hong Kong dispatch says that Dewey cannot control the insurgents. Spanish priests and sisters repaid Americans for their humanity by attempting to lead them into a mined channel.

5:15—News received this afternoon that Spanish fleet arrived at Cadiz from Cape Verde. Gen. Miles and staff leave for Tampa tonight to head expedition to Cuba. Entire force at Ohickamauga ordered to the front. Cavalry to New Orleans, Mobile and Tampa; entire infantry to Tampa. Movement began today. No news of Sampson's fleet. 30 vessels were chartered today at New York with capacity for 25,000 troops.

Serious riots continue in Spain, in which women take a prominent part.

May 11—Dispatch from Gibraltar says Brithish steamer passed Spanish torpedo destroyer guarding Algeria bay. Shorly after lights went out and boat disappeared with loud report. Supposed her boilers exploded and all perished.

Tax on tobacco will be increased to 16 cents per pound.

5th cavalry ordered to assemble at Houston and proceed to New Orleans.

Reported from St. Thomas that heavy oannonading was heard Monday in the direction of Porto Rico.

New York considers situation created by return of Spanish fleet to Cadiz as serious, indicating Spain will abandon Cuba and Porto Rico, and concentrate efforts holding the Phillipines. Fleet could reach Manila via Suez canal before Dewey could be reinforced by ships from Key West. It is said if report of the retura of Cadiz fleet is correct, Cuban expedition will leave in 48 hours

Charleston ordered to Manila with ammunition at once. Leave before Sunday.

May 12—9 a. m.—Engagement off Cardenas yesterday afternoon. U.S. Cruiser Winmihgton, torpedo boat Winslow and auxiliary gunboat Hudson participated. Hudson arrived at Key West this morning with bodies of Ensign Bagley and four others of the Winslow's crew. Several more wounded.

6 pm—The battle of Fort Cordenas was a teriific conflict. The Winslow and Hudson entered harbor and began firing on Spanish gunboats at Docks at a range of about 3500 yards. Spanish boats were assisted by shore batteries. Shot and shell seemed to come from every direction. The little torpedo boat Winslow kept her guns going with splendid regularity until a solid shot crashed through her hull and knocked out boilers. In an instant she began to rock and roll helplessly, and a ferocious yell of triumph come from the spanish and the rain of shot and shell fell faster. The Gunboat Hudson ran alongside and getting near enough threw a line. Ensign Bagley and a group of men stood on deck ready to make fast. "Heave her," cried Bagley, with a laugh, "it's getting hot here." At that moment a shell struck the deck in the midst of the group, instantly killing Bagley and several others. The line parted. Another was thrown, but there were only three men left on board to make fast. All this amid a galling fire from the batteries. The Winslow was finally towed out of range and the dead and wounded cared for.

May 13—Navy Department received dispatch from Sampson this morning. St. Thomas, May 12—Squadron arrived at daybreak; no armed vessels in the harbor. Commenced bombarding batteries defending citp. Attack lasted about three hours and resulted in much damage to batteries and city. Batteries replied but without material effect. One man was killed aboard the New York, and several were wounded. No serious damage to ships. The Evening News publishes the statement that San Juan, Porto Rico, surrended at six last night.

A striking illustration of the difference between a people among whom liberty and independent thought prevail and a people who are kept in ignorance and taught to live upon tradition is furnished by the history now being made in Spain and the United States. Had Commodore Dewey failed to annihilate the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila, the news of the disaster would have been received in the United States with regret, but there would have been no general dissaisfaction. The newspapers would, perhaps, have expressed the opinion that he attempted too much, or that he was not qualified to command a squadron, but no one would have questioned his patriotism or thought of mobbing the President and his cabinet.

But at Madrid the news of the Spanish disaster has almost upset the Government. In fact the dispatches from there indicate that the most dangerous enemy the Spanish throne now has is found in its people. Rumors of mobs and riots and disturbances in the Cortes, and threats of political uprisings are flying fast everywhere. Perhaps within a few days the Sagasta Ministry will pay for its blundering in the Maine affair with its political life.

These things indicate that there is a woful lack of patriotism among the Spanish people. Instead of combining when threatened from the outside, they do like all ignorant people do, commence fighting among themselves. On the other hand, the Americans, who continually fight among themselves in times of peace, combine the moment they are threatened by a foreign foe.

In the early part of the negotiations between Spain and the United States over the Maine affair, a Spanish statesman said that in the event of trouble uprisings would certainly take place in the Southern States. Not only has this failed to happen, but the South is more anxious to fight Spain than any other part of the country. Its prominent men are seeking positions in the army, and its ordinary citizens are everywhere offering their services to the Government. Not a word about politics has been heard since the beginning of hostilities. Of the Spanish subject the United States is practically a unit today. What could more forcibly illustrate the weakness of Spain than the present discontented condition of her people at home.

Wouldn't Be Stood Off.

There was a bold, bad man talking things hot in a Texas town a few days ago. He wore long hair, a deershin hunting suit, a big sombrero, and he was waving a small fieldpiece in his hand and yelling for somebody to walk in and get pulverized.

He had his back against the courthouse, and the city marshal and the police argued with him from the middle of the street and dodged every time he swung his howitzer in their direction. Lots of citizens had turned out to witness the performance, and it looked for awhile as if the bad man had the whole town against the ropes.

Presently a little, weak kneed drummer from Connecticut, who was among the crowd, adjusted his spectacles for a closer look at the desperado, and then before anybody could stop him he gave a yell and started for the bad man at a 2:40 gait.

The bad man saw him coming and tried to climb over the courthouse, but the little drummer nabbed him and said something to him. The bad man ran his hand into his pocket and gave up something. Then the marshal and the police closed in, and the desperado went off with them as gentle as a lamb.

When the little drummer was questioned, he said:

"Afraid? Not much. That fellow owed me $9. He was raised in the same town in Connecticut that I was, and I loaned it to him when he started for Texas 13 years ago. I generally collect what's owing me. Say, what were the cops afraid of him for?"—Detroit Free Press.

Did It Quietly and Well.

It is now four years since the electoral franchise was granted to all women 21 years of age by act of the New Zealand local parliament, and as the parliaments in New Zealand last for three years there have been two general elections in which the women's vote has been a most important factor. It is only just to note that there are no symptoms of public regret at the step thus taken, nor are there, so far, any indications of the change having altered in other respects the ordinary usages of society. On the other hand, it is important to observe that the change was no new idea in New Zealand. It was not the result of female agitation, either through the press or on the platform. There were no "women's rights" leagues organized, nor was any public attempt made to denounce the selfishness of men or to magnify the virtues and intellectual powers of women.

To the persons who have put themselves forward in positions of prominence in the "women's rights" movements in America and Great Britain the attitude of the women of New Zealand would undoubtedly have seemed slow and supine to an extraordinary degree. They held no meetings; they sent no petitions; they published no letters or pamphlets—either to denounce men or to praise women. What they did was to take advantage of every opportunity that was given them of taking part in the management of public affairs and of showing an active and intelligent interest in public questions.—Hon. Hugh H. Lusk in Forum.

A Desert Murder

Last Saturday the body of Mariano J. Canados, a Portuguese sheep man, was found by Deputy Sheriff Carrasco about a half-mile below Olancha. His throat was cut, and the remains were in an advanced state of decomposition. Coroner Woodin went down on Sunday and held an inquest. The jury returned a verdict that the deceased came to his death from knife wounds supposed to have been inflicted by a sheepherder in his employ.

On Friday of the preceding week Canados and his herder were seen at Olancha about 10 a. m. Shortly after noon the herder alone appeared and tried to dispose of the sheep to Dave Holland. He was covered with blood, and on being questioned said that he had cut his dogs throat.

The following day he sold the sheep to Marshal Naylor and Chas. Robinson, and came to Lone Pine on Sunday. He went to Harvey's stable, and asked to be driven to the depot to take the train. He was informed that no train would leave until Tuesday, but he went to the depot and camped until Tuesday morning, when he purchased a ticket for San Francisco. His description was wired ahead, and a man supposed to be the murderer is now under arrest in San Francisco.

Sheriff Given and Dave Holland left for the city yesterday morning after their man.

FROM SWAMPER

LONE PINE, Cal., May 11, 1898.

One day last week Swamper and Comrade Fred S. Wallace chartered a chariot and a couple of the most vigorous horses of the Mustang persuasion in this neck of the woods for the purpose of visiting a point six or seven miles from the Lane mine. Lieutenant Wallace steered the craft into Keeler, making the 16-land miles in Spanish war time. Mine host Tom Boland was found cloading his brow over an hydrostatic problem, connected with inducting the emblem of purity into the revamped inn—so long the solace of the tired traveler from the wilds of Nevada, i.e. that Tom has readjusted the Belleville tavern near the site of the timehonored Lakeview—cremated in the initial month of the Spanish war year. The transfer has been conducted in a manner which preserves the general contour of the original edition of the house. Slight changes have been made in the construction, all of which add to the comfort and comeliness of the new era tavern at the terminus of rapid transit in Inyo. The newness of the revamped Belleville house will be toned down nicely by re hr s ening it the Lakeview House. A quiet night blessed by the comforts of a sleep-inspiring couch put us in a good plight for subsequent journey.

We made the tour named and reached the town named after the great evolutionist about the 14th hour of the day. The next day we visited the Lane mine, and our objective point, about seven miles distant. We came onto a veritable oasis in the desert—a little nook inhabited by an ancient Hibernian named Jerry Fitzgerald. As you approach this genial spot coming down the sand wash, all at once your eye is gladdened by a lovely landscape of verdure, set in a frame of rugged mountain surroundings. Willow trees of gigantic growth dotted the grass-grown vale, rare plants and heath blossoms, punctuated the scene in a manner calculated to call the attention of anyone with a modicum of poetry in his systsm. We met the proprietor of this poetic paradise mounted on a long eared accident of nature en route to Darwin in quest of the latest war news. Commissioned by the happy hermit to make ourselves at home we unhitched our steeds and made a pilgrimage to our objective point about two miles distant. Having accomplished our mission we returned to Jerry's paradise, re-hitched our steeds and brought up at the Lane in time to rest for supper. Here we found every thing in good shape. The new gasoline engine had just been started and works nicely. The condition of the mine was reported as O.K. The smelter will be aglow by the first of June, and a new era of prosperity for this section is confidently assured. We have learned that Mr. John Barnes, proprietor of the Lane "eat" house has a fair chance for recovery from protracted illness, the latest report being to the effect that he is rapidly mending under the treatment of Dr. Middleton of Big Pine. The quiet of this somnolient town has been disturbed a little by the tragedy at Olancha—particulars of which have no doubt reached the capital ere this.

Mrs. S. W. Austin, late popular and efficient teacher of the school here has gone to Oakland to enjoy her vacation. Miss Leah Darrah, late of the primary department will remain in Lone Pine for a few months.

Felix Meysan is prospecting a claim just opposite town, which he thinks likely to wake things up in the near future.

SWAMPER.

Silver Knight-Watchman: Why not utilize the $50,000,000 of silver bullion in the treasury belonging to the government as seigniorage? Both Houses of Congress passed a law in Cleveland's administration to issue silver certificates on this bullion and coin it into silver dollars. Republicans and democrats voted for the bill. Cleveland vetoed it because it was not in the interest of the gold monopoly.* Everybody knows that the silver certificates in circulation are the best money we have. They are not exported in time of war. They stay at home and fight our battles. More than half the money in actual circulation today consists of silver coin and silver certificates. The coinage value of the silver now in the treasury of the United States, in round numbers, is about $550,000,000; the silver certificates and Sherman notes amount to about $500,000,000. If silver certificates were issued equal to the coinage value of the silver on hand $50,000,000 would immediately go into the treasury. Besides, it is not necessary to have dollar for dollar to enable the government to redeem outstanding silver certificates. Two for one could be issued with perfect safety. If the government would make the silver certificates a full legal tender and require the Secretary of the Treasury to issue from time to time such an amount of certificates to the extent necessary to meet the obligations of the goverment and carry on the war, we would have great prosperity at home by the increase in the volume of money. This would not load the people with more bonds and more taxation, and deprive them of money with which to pay taxes, as proposed by the Dingley bill. If the Republican goldites, however, are determined to ignore silver, why not issue $200,000,000 or more of greenbacks to meet the exigencies of war, as was done between 1861 and 1865, and as had been done from time to time when the government required money, from the administration of Jefferson down to the administration of Lincoln? Why add to the horrors of war the horrors of increased taxation and further contraction?

We understand perfectly well that the Dingley-Gage scheme is to be urged on Congress under a plea of patriotism, but it is the duty of every patriot to prevent, if possible, the consummation of this scheme of spoilation. We do not charge Mr. Dingley and his Republican associates with bad motives. They undoubtedly think it is a good thing for the people to be taxed, a good thing for the government to be bonded, and that the people really have no rights which concentrated wealth does or ought to respect. They believe as firmly in bank monopoly, bank rule and gold standard contraction as their phototypes believed in the flatworld theory and in the duty of Christians to kill witches. They are just as conscientious in killing the prosperity of the country and enslaving the people as the divines and judges were when they tortured witches to drive out the devil.

DON'T BE FOUNDERED.

We blanket a horse in the warmest weather after a hard drive if he is to stand in his stall. We take violent exercise and do hard manual labor, and very many take no precaution against sudden cooling off. In case of the horse, if he chills, he will be foundered. In case of men and women who are forgetful of the consequences, they will suffer soreness and stiffness from head to foot. If we are thus forgetful, we need not be so of the fact that St. Jacobs Oil, used in a case of the kind, is one of the best and surest cures. A good rubbing relaxes the stiffened muscles and puts the joints to work again in good order. In this season of sports none who enjoy them ought to be without a bottle of the Oil.

If Reformer Charlotte Smith succeeds in mobilizing her 30,000 unmarried women to fight against Spain, they will probably be armed with hat pins.

THE MODERN GENERATION OF MEN.

Physically men are better to-day than ever before. Our college youth are, as a general thing, magnificent specimens. The constitutionally weak and nervous, though they may never become athletes, can greatly increase their strength and restore tranquility to the nervous system by the efficient aid of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which also removes malarial, kidney, dyspeptic and bilious trouble.

FIRE HORSES.

The Quickest Ones In the World Are Said to Be In Kansas City.

F. S. Dellenbaugh writes of "The Quick Horse" in St. Nicholas, his article telling of the training of horses for the fire department. Mr. Dellenbaugh says:

The quickest horses in the world were at one time in Kansas City at the headquarters of its fire department, directly under the office of the chief, Mr. George C. Hale. To Mr. Hale's genius more than to any other factor the quick horse owed his first development, for Mr. Hale is the inventor of the earliest swinging harness which made the quick horse possible. When Mr. Henry M. Stanley and his wife were in this country, they witnessed an exhibition drill of the Kansas City fire department. The drill so impressed the visitors that an account of it was published in a London journal, and this English article brought an invitation to Mr. Hale to visit England as the representative of the American fire service at the international fire tournament. Mr. Hale and a picked corps went to England, taking with them the remarkably quick horses Joe and Dan, and they became world famous. As the quickest harnessing time of the London fire brigade is 1 minute 17½ seconds and the Kansas City horses were harnessed in 1¾ seconds and were out of the engine house in less than 8 seconds, there could be no competition. In Kansas City four fine bays were harnessed to the hook and ladder truck almost as quickly as even Joe and Dan could jump into their harnesses. It was a pretty sight to see these four well kept horses spring to their places at the stroke of the gong and in two or three seconds stand ready to run with the apparatus. Joe was killed by an accident, but Dan, with a new mate, is still in service, and as quick as ever.

The record for quickest time from the engine house to the throwing of water on the fire is held by a Kansas City company. In this instance the horses were harnessed, a run of 2,194 feet (a little less than half a mile) was made, and water thrown from the hose in the wonderfully brief time of 1 minute 31½ seconds.

It Will Pay.

It will pay to carefully read the descriptive advertisement of Alabastine appearing in this paper, explaining the difference between those goods and kalsomines.

Consumers should bear in mind that Alabastine is unlike all the various kalsomines sold on the market under different names. Alabastine stands pre-eminent and alone as a durable wall coating, and all consumers in buying should see that the goods are in packages and properly labeled.

Eggs In China.

From the diary of three Englishmen in Yunnanese China: Eggs were brought to us. They were hard and black and had strong smells. "These are rotten!" we exclaimed. "Oh, no," we were told, "they have simply been buried underground for a year! It is true eggs go bad, but if they remain long enough underground they get all right again." We gave the eggs back, with the observation: "They will probably be excellent in the fullness of time, but they haven't been long enough in the ground. Go and bury them deep—as deep as you can."—North China Herald.

Will Be Seen.

He—What is the use of putting all that trimming on the back of your hat? Do you suppose any man can see the back of your hat when he meets you?

LET US ALL LAUGH.

JOKES FROM THE PENS OF VARIOUS HUMORISTS.

Pleasant Incidents Occurring the World Over—Sayings that Are Cheerful to Old or Young—Funny Selections that You Will Enjoy.

A True Friend.

Sells—Well, old chap, it's all settled. I am going to marry Miss Mills next month, and I want you to act as best man.

Wells—All right, my boy; you can count upon me. I never desert a friend when misfortune overtakes him.

The Sequel.

Customer—I bought a plaster of you three weeks ago to help me get rid of the lumbago.

Drug Clerk—Yes, I remember it. Didn't it do the work?

Customer—Oh, yes; but I want something now that will help me to get rid of the plaster.

The Proper Classification.

Weeks—Did you hear about the high-handed villainy of your friend Blake?

Meeks—No; what did he do?

Weeks—Deserted his family and eloped with his stenographer.

Meeks—That seems more like short-handed than high-handed villainy.

A Victim of Gossip.

Mamma—Hans, I find you didn't go to school yesterday!

Hans—O, the teacher told you! These women can never hold their tongues!—Heitere Welt.

Somewhat Different.

Fond memories of the long ago
Come back with songs I used to sing;
But when songs I send to publishers
Come back to me—'tis another thing.

Running No Risks.

"I see that most of the New York society women claim to be descended from kings."

"Yes, but they have taken good care to select kings that are very, very dead."

Heartless.

"Darling," he exclaimed, "if you should say no it would kill me!"

"Come, then," she replied, "let's get as far away from the house as possible before I give you your answer."

Slowly Improving.

The Minister—I am told that your husband spends much of his time playing checkers.

Mrs. Softleigh—Yes, but let us be charitable with him, doctor. He is improving in his ways. He used to play golf.

A Natural Conclusion.

Editor—You interviewed Mrs. Blank on the subject, I suppose?

Reporter—Well, not exactly; I saw the lady but she refused to talk.

Editor—Refused to talk! Why, when did she die?

Then he Was Sorry She Spoke.

Jessie—Do you believe in fortune-telling?

Tom—Oh, I don't know. Sometimes I'm half inclined to think there may be something in it.

Jessie—Because a gypsy once told me that I was to be married twice and that my first husband was to leave me with an immense fortune.

Tom—That settles it. I take no risks. Get some other fellow to be the first one and if his part of it comes true I'll call around again. Good-night.

Test of Fidelity.

"Won't you please weigh that parcel, sir? Those are the letters that my Fritz sent me last year, and I want to see if he has written to me as faithfully as he did the year before!—Humoristische Blaetter.

Practical Experience.

Landlady—That new boarder is either married or a widower.

Daughter—Why, ma, he says he's a bachelor.

Landlady—Don't you believe he is. When he opens his pocketbook to pay his board he always turns his back to me.

Worst of Them All.

Traveler—Don't you get tired answering so many foolish questions?

Ticket Agent—Yes.

Traveler—Which one tires you most?

Ticket Agent—That one.

She Just Suffered.

"Yes," she sighed, "for many years I've suffered from dyspepsia."

"And don't you take anything for it?" her friend asked. "You look healthy enough."

"Oh," she replied, "it's my husband that has it."

Papa's Definition.

"Papa, what is meant by 'taking Time by the forelock?'"

"In most cases, my son, it is worrying about things that never happen."

Encouraging Her.

Myrtle—Oh, dear! I wish I could think of some new way to say no. I've had to refuse so many men lately that I am positively becoming weary of the old way of declining.

Alice—I wouldn't worry about that, dear. The follows probably enjoy the joke just as much as if you said something original each time.

At the Door.

Invalid—O, doctor, I'm afraid I'm pretty well at death's door!

Doctor—Don't you worry, my dear sir—we'll pull you through!—London Punch.

One Secret he Keeps.

Dixon—Why is it that it is usually unmarried women who write articles on "How to Manage a Husband?"

Hixon—Oh, you don't suppose a married woman is going to give her little plan away, do you?

How to Arouse Interest.

He—They say your minister is creating a regular furore.

She—Yes, he has a stereopticon and charges an admission fee now, so we have to have the police every Sunday to keep the crowds in check.

Not a Complete Success.

He—What a winning way that Miss Dexter has!

She—Oh, I don't know. She has been trying for ten years and hasn't won a husband yet.

Her Suggestion.

Aged Suitor—My dear Miss Flypp, I can't find words to express my love for you.

Miss Flypp—Then why don't you turn the job over to one of the express companies?

A Bad Investment.

Mrs. Holden—John, we'll never be able to save a cent if you don't quit being so extravagant.

Mr. Holden—Why, my dear, I'm not at all extravagant.

Mrs. Holden—Yes, you are. There's that accident policy you bought nearly a year ago, and you haven't used it once; if that isn't extravagance I don't know what is.

Fast Friends.

Martha—Do you believe that Renee's hair is dyed?

Jane—Isn't it nice of you to say such things! I'm sure it isn't dyed.

Martha—How do you know?

Jane—I was with her when she bought it.—Paris Gaulois.

Not So Warm.

Hixon—I understand you had a fire in your library last night. Much of a loss?

Dixon—Oh, no; only a few unbound volumes of smoke.

Natural History.

Bob-o-Link (the American jail bird)—does nothing but Sing-Sing all the year round.—New York World.

The Long and Short of It.

Smiles—I dislike the month of February more than any other.

Giles—Why so?

Smiles—Because I work by the day and pay board by the month.

As a Substitute.

Diggs—My wife has throat trouble, and the doctor told her she must not talk for a week.

Biggs—How can she manage to keep from talking?

Diggs—Oh, she chews gum all the time.

The Cheerful Idiot.

"Poverty," said the platitudinous boarder, "is the cause of most crime."

"Strange, isn't it," commented the Cheerful Idiot, "how straitened circumstances will make a man crooked?"—Indianapolis Journal.

Following Instructions.

Lamchop—Waiter, two eggs, please; boil them four minutes.

Waiter—All right, sir. Be ready in half a second.—Boston Traveler.

Appetizing Relishes.

The taste for hors d'oeuvre, which has grown up in this country in the last few years, has introduced flavoring butter, but we are still far from using this medium to anything like the extent it might be. Abroad flavoring butters are in great request for kitchen use, a morsel of one or other of them, according to the preparation, being almost invariably added just at the last to sauces to give the requisite fresh butter flavor deemed essential to a well made sauce, while at the same time enhancing the appropriate and distinctive aroma of the condiment. But there is a further use for these butters which should especially commend them to the notice of the housewife, and this is the preparation of sandwiches. If, instead of a layer of plain butter, the sliced bread were delicately spread with some appropriate butter, it would double its attraction without giving any very arduous work to the maker. For instance, the ordinary ham sandwiches would be entirely different, if made with mustard or chutney butter, while a dash of anchovy or maitre d'hotel butter would similarly improve cold beef.

WHEN YOU ARE OLD.

When you are old and gray and full of sleep
And nodding by the fire, take down this book
And slowly read and dream of the fair look
Your eyes had once and of their shadows deep.

How many loved your moments of glad grace
And loved your beauty with love false or true,
But one man loved the pilgrim soul in you
And loved the sorrows of your changing face

And, bending down beside the glowing bars,
Murmured a little sad, "From us fled love."
He paced upon the mountains far above
And hid his face amid a crowd of stars.

—"Poems," by W. B. Yeats.

Flowers In History.

Flowers have always played a great part in the world's history. They have done so ever since the days of the Plantagenets, when a king took a sprig of yellow broom "to live and to die with my name." The rose of England, the lilies of France—what wild passions and fierce conflicts have not these innocent blossoms raised! And then the violet! Surely it was the irony of fate that wove this emblem of humility into the proud destinies of the French empire—a forecast perhaps of the tragedies to come. The Empress Eugenie wore them on her bridal day; they fell thick and fast on the prince imperial's pall. They were laid on the last resting place of England's beloved "Princess Mary," sent with these words, "Souvenir d'une tendre amitie," from the Empress Eugenie herself.

A Latin poem of the sixteenth century has a pretty legend of a violet that, in mythological days, was a maiden called Ianthis, one of Diana's nymphs. She attracted the attention of Apollo, whose admiration she did not return, and, flying from his pursuit, she implored Diana to destroy the beauty which occasioned her so much trouble. Diana granted her request and turned her face to a dull purple. Ianthis, however, soon regretted the loss of her beauty and was pining away with grief, when the goddess had pity on her and changed her into a flower, which still shrinks from Apollo (the sun) and hides her modest head in the shade; hence perhaps the French "posie," which often accompanies the violet (used as a seal or ring ornamentation), "Il faut me chercher."—Gentlewomen.

Not Fickle.

The saying, "Fickle as a weathercock," once received a striking refutation in the experience of Dr. W. E. Channing. The famous Boston divine, being of a feeble constitution, was led to go to extremes in protecting himself against the cold, penetrating air of the winter in Boston. At such times nothing would induce him to go out of the house, even in a carriage, if the wind was from the east.

A friend, not having heard from Dr. Channing for three weeks, notwithstanding that the weather had been unusually mild and agreeable, feared that he might be ill and called at his house to inquire. He found Channing in his library, the sun streaming through the closed windows, and a blazing fire in the grate. The room was almost suffocating. The doctor himself seemed in his usual health and spirits. Naturally the visitor asked why he was not enjoying the soft air and sunshine. Channing shook his head and said: "Impossible, my friend. I dare not, and you know I never do, venture out of doors in an east wind."

"But the wind has been south for the last three weeks," urged his friend.

"You are greatly mistaken," rejoined the doctor. "Look at the weather vane," and he pointed triumphantly to the weathercock of a neighboring church.

"But that vane has not moved for the last three weeks. It wants oiling," was the response.

The good doctor had been kept a prisoner for three weeks by a rusty weathercock.—Youth's Companion.

Not So Green.

The up town bound cable car apparently was in the hands of a green motorman. At least that was the way the crowd of passengers accepted it when, after each stop, it started up again with a violent jerk, which threw big men around like skittles. Straps were of no value.

At Prince street a little old man got on and made his way to about the middle of the car. He lost something of his mildness of expression when he was thrown suddenly and forcibly against a young woman, knocking off her hat, but he said nothing. Next a big man made a parabolic swing, landed and nearly knocked him through the window. Then the face of the little man grew very red. He pushed his way to the front door and, shaking his finger in the motorman's surly visage, threatened to throw him off the car and run the thing himself. The motorman "sassed" back, but the excited little passenger talked fast and dared him to do it again. Then he shut the door and waited, and every one held his breath when the bell rang.

But the fight did not come off. The car started as gently as molasses, and never once from Prince street, where that one little man stood on his rights, up to Fiftieth street did the car start in any but the smoothest way.

That motorman was not so green.—New York Sun.

The English of It.

She—Yes, and the more I think of it the less I think of it.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Spring Medicine

These two words emphasize a necessity and indicate a remedy.

SPRING—the season when the blood is most impure as a result of the winter's closer confinement, higher living, slower action of the kidneys and liver; when humors of all kinds, boils, pimples and eruptions are most liable to appear; when the weak, languid condition of the whole bodily structure demands and welcomes help.

MEDICINE—that to which the millions turn at this season—Hood's Sarsaparilla. The original and only preparation especially adapted to the present needs of the human family; that which makes the blood pure and clean as shown by its thousands of wonderful cures of dreadful blood diseases; creates an appetite and cures dyspepsia, as shown by its "magic touch" in all stomach troubles; steadies and strengthens the nerves, as proved by people formerly nervous, now calm and self-possessed, thanks to

Only those who have been relieved of great suffering can fully appreciate the gratitude with which the testimonials overflow written in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Just read this:

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"Gentlemen:—I was very much troubled with hives, which appeared in large white and red blotches all over my body. My skin was rough and I suffered with constant itching. I tried various remedies without benefit, and finally began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. The first bottle did me so much good, I continued its use until I had taken five or six bottles, and I have never been troubled with hives since that time."

A. J. MOORE.

Well and Strong.

"I was afflicted with a tired feeling and my blood was in such a condition that every little scratch would develop into a sore. I tried several medicines but did not feel satisfied with the result until I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. I am now well and strong, and weigh more than I ever did in my life." MRS. E. CHEESMAN, Jamul, Cal.

"I was suffering from a rash similar to salt rheum, which appeared on every part of my body. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. I have taken six bottles and the rash has entirely disappeared."

GEORGE PENMAN, Novato, Cal.

A Native Australian Weather Prophet.

"Warrigul," called Sergeant Dalton to the black tracker, "look out for a high, dry spot for the camp tonight. My bunnion and those black clouds up there say it's going to rain soon."

The aborigine rolled over on his back, and for several minutes he scanned the somber banks above. Then he darted a glance into the forest about. Dalton watched him, for he knew that the eye of a weather prophet peered into the elements.

The whole time the black lay on the ground, with his arms under his head, he never moved a muscle. His eyes rolled about in his head like irresponsible pupiled white marbles, covering the whole space from the ground behind him to the horizon in front and the earth rim of the black vault above him, on each side. Then he slowly closed his lids for a moment and rolled over on his elbow, facing the sergeant.

"No rain, massa. Plenty dry spell all along two months."

"How do you tell all this weather business?" the sergeant asked, for he knew by past experience that the weather prediction of any true Australian tribesman was more to be trusted than that from any scientific meteorological bureau. These people predict seasons of wind and rain with perfect accuracy.

"See gum leaf?" said Warrigul, pointing to the eucalyptus trees.

"Yes, plenty of them," assented Dalton.

"S'posin it rain, leaf lay down. S'posin it keep dry, leaf stand up. See, all leaf stand up to look for water. Water long time off.

"Look on ground," continued the aboriginal bushman. "Gum leaf dry, turn up, crack loud. No rain. S'posin rain soon, leaf drink in wet first; lay out. Plenty heavy dew all nights; plenty long dry spell ahead."—Outing.

Baits and Where to Find Them.

Frogs are most plentiful on the shores of ponds and streams filled with plant growth and in low moist places in meadows. In searching for them in grass wait till you see one jump, then catch it in your hands. They are not so easily got from the shores, as they are apt to take to the water at the first alarm.

Crabs are usually found under stones along the shores of a stream or pond, and in some localities in low moist places in grass lands. Seize the crab back of the pinchers and it cannot nip you.

Dobsons are only found under mossy stones in swift running waters. They are of a dark gray color, have many legs, and when fully grown are about three inches long. The head is shield shaped and armed with good stout pincers, so handle the dobson as you would a crab. The best way to get a supply of dobsons is to have some one hold one edge of a fine meshed net on the bottom of the stream, while you turn over the stones above the net with a hoe. The dobsons, loosing their hold on the bottom, will be carried by the current into the net. Put frogs, crabs and dobsons into a pail with plenty of grass and some water. If you are to keep them for some time, change the water occasionally.

Grubs are excellent bait for trout early in the season. They are found in partially decayed tree trunks, stumps and old timbers left in moist places. Cut into the wood with an ax, and if you find it full of holes of the size of a lead pencil knock it to pieces and pick out the grubs. Put them in a tin bait box with some of the rotten wood you found them in.—Harper's Round Table.

Natural Suspicion.

"What makes you think this man an impostor when he says he is from Boston?"

"The fact that he doesn't claim to live in the Back Bay district."—Chicago News.

A man may float in salt water without moving his hands or feet if he has the presence of mind to throw his head back and allow his body to sink to the position which it will then naturally take.

A Curious Lion Story.

When lions were still numerous and easily observed in southern Africa, they were sometimes seen instructing one another in voluntary gymnastics and practicing their leaps, making a hush play the part of the absent game. Moffat tells the story of a lion, which had missed a zebra by miscalculating the distance, repeating the jump several times for his own instruction. Two of his comrades coming upon him while he was engaged in the exercise, he led them around the rock to show them how matters stood, and then, returning to the starting point, completed the lesson by making a final leap. The animals kept roaring during the whole of the curious scene, "talking together," as the native who watched them said. By the aid of individual training of this kind industrial animals become apter as they grow older; old birds, for instance, constructing more artistic nests than young ones, and little mammals like mice becoming more adroit with age. Yet, however ancient in the life of the species these acquisitions may be, they have not the solidity of primordial instincts and are lost rapidly if not used.—M. C. Letourneau in Popular Science Monthly.

ALABASTINE

ALABASTINE IS WHAT?

Alabastine is a durable and natural coating for walls and ceilings entirely different from all kalsomine preparations, made ready for use in white or twelve beautiful tints by the simple addition of water (latest make being adapted to mix with cold water), put up in dry powder form, in 5 pound packages, with full directions on every package.

WHAT ARE KALSOMINES?

Kalsomines are cheap temporay preparations manufactured from chalks, clay, whiting, etc., are stuck on the wall with decaying animal glue. Alabastine is a cement, which goes through a process of setting, hardens with age, can be re-coated and re-decorated from time to time without having to wash and scrape off its old coats before renewing.

MUCH SICKNESS

Particularly throat and lung difficulties, wrongly attributed to other causes, is the result of unsanitary conditions of walls and ceilings. Think of having bedrooms covered with layers of molding flour paste to feed vermin, with paper to hide them and to absorb the moisture of respiration, and an animal glue culture ground on its face for disease germs; this having strong colors added like a colored shirt, to hide the dirt; then think of "the nasty practice" of repeating this papering, without removing the old, and a number of times, at that, as many do. Then think of a room coated with pure, porous, permanent Alabastine, which is retinted with but little trouble or expense, and is purifying and sweet-smelling and fills cracks. Wall paper free would be dearer than Alabastine if cost of removing paper is considered.

TO DEALERS.

Do not buy a law suit or an injunction with cheap kalsomines, which are all imitations of Alabastine. Dealers assume the risk of a suit for damages by selling an infringement. Alabastine Company own the right, covered by letters patent, to make and sell wall coatings adapted to be mixed with cold water. Alabastine Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.

THE COUNTRY ROAD.

From the busy haunts of farmer-folk
It starts on its winding way,
Goes over the hill, and across the brook,
Where the minnows love to play;
Beside the mill with the water wheel,
And the pond so dark and deep,
Then up to the tavern and village store,
And the church where the dead lie asleep.

You would never think that the country road
From the hill to the store could be
So long to a boy with an errand to do
And another boy to see.
You can never dream how short it is
From the farm to the frozen pond,
Nor how very much farther it always is
To the school house just beyond.

Oh, the country road at the farther end
It runs up hill and down,
Away from the woods and the rippling brook,
To the toiling, rushing town;
But, best of it all, when you're tired and sick
Of the weary haunts of men,
If you follow it back, it will lead you home
To the woods and fields again.

AT THE LAST MOMENT.

THERE are still people who talk of Wellington and 1815, but it is now generally understood that the real battle of Waterloo takes place every Saturday morning at the station of that name, when the special trains start for South Africa. It is a desperate struggle while it lasts, and the uniformed men have an exceedingly warm time of it, but they have always conquered before, and this encourages and gives them enthusiasm. Mr. John Beste—the name was on the leather label of his single portmanteau—Mr. John Beste, down in good time before the real tussle began, looked on with interest. He was a tall, reserved-looking man, with a short beard and the brown complexion that comes to men who have looked at the South African sun.

"No one to see me off," said John Beste. (A short mother was stepping on tiptoe to kiss a burly youth, and the sight gave him thoughts.) "Of course there is no one to see me off," he continued argumentatively. "Why should there be?"

Mr. John Beste placed his portmanteau in the corner of a first-class compartment, and laughed a little bitterly at his grumbled soliloquy. A light touch on his arm made him wheel round. The sound of a soft voice made him flush.

"Mr. Beste?"

"Miss Langham! Are you here to say good-by to me?"

"That was the idea," said the young woman, brightly. "I suppose there are others. How long before your train goes?"

"About twenty minutes, Miss Langham."

"Only twenty minutes. I am sorry that you are going so quickly. And you will see Mr. Charterhouse, I suppose"—she stepped aside to avoid a juggernaut trolley of luggage—"as soon as you arrive?" she resumed.

"I can't possibly avoid that. Is Mrs. Langham here?"

"My aunt does not know that I have come down. Did you want to see her, Mr. Beste?"

"Her presence," he said, gravely, "is not indispensable to my happiness."

"I'm afraid that you are inclined to be a little unjust to her. You don't know her as well as I do, Mr. Beste."

"That is so. But Mrs. Langham has made a confidant of me during the time that I have been here, and—well, I think I understand her."

"Tout comprehendre c'est tout pardonner," quoted the young lady.

"Not in every case."

"I should like to know what you talked about. It occurred to me at dinner last night that——"

"Upon my word, Miss Langham, I have half a mind to tell you."

"Half a mind is plenty, Mr. Beste. I have a special reason for wanting to know. My dear aunt has not always the best tact in the world."

"That," he said, dryly, "occurred to me."

"Was it of me that she was talking, I wonder? Was I the object?"

"It was of you," he said.

"And my aunt said?"

"Am I bound to answer these questions, my lord?"

A band of Jewish financial gentlemen came along the crowded platform, forming an entourage to some important individual in their center. With the enterprise of their race, they forced the other passengers aside, and Mr. John Beste and Miss Langham were separated in the commotion.

"You are bound," said the young Portia, returning, "to answer all the questions that are put to you for the next fifteen minutes."

"Mrs. Langham," said Mr. John Beste, shifting his rug from one arm to the other, and bending a little closer to the bewildering hat and the charming face that it selfishly attempted to hide, "Mrs. Langham was extremely anxious that I should convey certain information to Mr. Charterhouse. As manager to Mr. Charterhouse's valuable mine, Mrs. Langham seems to have thought that I should be a valuable—what shall I say?—a valuable fellow conspirator."

"Go on," she said, quickly and with great concern.

"I wonder whether you can guess what I am going to say?"

"I hope I am not guessing rightly. It is too terrible!"

"Mrs. Langham was good enough to say that for anything I could say to my—my master, Mr. Charterhouse, that would assist the object she had in view, I should be well repaid.. This was, of course, very generous of your aunt."

"Go on, Mr. Beste."

The time was flying. Passengers were settling down in their compartments, and at every window was a bunch of heads. There were tears, too, because some of those on the platform—parents saying good-by to sons, and wives saying adieu to husbands—were sufficiently old-fashioned to possess emotions.

"And what I had to do was this: Mr. Charterhouse is, as you know, a bachelor."

"Mr. Charterhouse may be an old maid for all I know or care," she said, hotly.

"And I—I was to use my influence with Charterhouse—which is, I admit, considerable—to induce him to come over here to—to see Miss Langham."

"And buy her, I suppose," she exclaimed, trembling with excitement, but not allowing her voice to raise itself. "To buy me and to sign the agreement at St. George's, Hanover square."

"I think," he said, apologetically, "that your aunt is very anxious that you should make a good marriage."

"These good marriages are all bad ones," declared Eva Langham, hotly. "Mr. Beste, you must help me. I cannot allow my aunt to make me appear shameful and ridiculous in people's eyes. You must promise not to say a word to Mr. Charterhouse about me. I don't know him, and I don't want to know him."

"He saw you once, I think, when you were a girl at school."

"I beg of you, Mr. Beste, to do this for me. I shall marry—when I do marry—just whom I like, and I will not consider any one whom I don't like."

"I am glad to hear you say so."

"I should not dream of saying anything else."

"I thought, from what your aunt said, that you understood——"

"Indeed, indeed, Mr. Beste," she said, pleadingly, "you must not think so badly of me as all that."

"I can't tell you how glad I am," he said, honestly, "to hear it. I shall, at any rate, take away pleasant memories now."

"Thank you."

"And," he went on, with something of a hurry in his manner, "I shall think of you a great deal, Miss Langham. Now that you have told me this, I shall look back upon this visit to England as one of absolute delight."

"And—and you will come back again?"

He waited a moment.

"I wonder whether I might write to you?" he asked.

"I think," she said, looking up with a pleased expression, "that there is no law against that."

"I was afraid you would consider it an impertinence on my part."

"You find that I do not."

"There is something else to explain," he said, awkwardly. "I have been here, to some extent, in disguise. I think, perhaps, I had better write and tell you all about it."

"There are still five minutes," she said, looking at the tiny gold watch on her wrist. "Why not tell me now?"

"I suppose," he said, with some nervousness, "that under no circumstances would you marry Mr. Charterhouse?"

"Under no circumstances," replied Miss Langham, decidely.

"He is very rich," he remarked, "and I happen to know that he——"

"I desire," said the young woman, with much spirit, "I desire not to hear Mr. Charterhouse's name again."

"Your mind is quite made up?"

"Quite!"

A porter stood patiently at the door of the compartment, holding it open for the passenger to South Africa. ("There's nothing like a young engaged couple," said the acute porter to himself, "for making trains late. They don't care.")

"But suppose I were to tell you," he said, taking her hand and holding it, "that Mr. Charterhouse, who was a poorish man until three years ago, when this mine was found on his property, has been in England lately? Suppose I were to tell you that he has fallen in love with you——"

"Even that does not concern me, Mr. Beste."

"And supposing I were to tell you that, to avoid being pestered by financial people, and to see the little school girl who has grown so tall and so—so charming, he preferred to call himself, not Mr. Charterhouse, the owner of the West End Mine, but Mr. Beste, the manager of——"

"That," said Miss Langham, her breath coming quickly, "would make all the difference."

The porter jerked his head toward the compartment, to hint to his client that moments were valuable. The client had no need of this intimation, for he knew better than the porter how very precious the moments were.

"Do you really mean that?" he asked, quickly.

"I never say things I don't mean, Mr. Beste—I mean, Mr. Charterhouse." She laughed a little nervously. "I shall always think of you as Mr. Beste."

"But will you always think of me? May I come back here in three months, time and ask you formally——"

"Now, then, sir," said the porter, "you'll go and lose the special, that's what you'll do."

"I musn't do that, my man. Good-by, Eva. I must take my seat, I suppose."

He stepped into the compartment, and the porter, shutting the door, received a tip that made him whistle with delight.

"And you won't give me an answer now, then?" he went on, anxiously. "I wish there was time to persuade you, dear, to say 'yes.' But I suppose I must wait until I return, and we must talk it over then, and I must try to induce you——"

"I think," said Eva Langham, looking up, and drawing her gray veil carefully up from her lips, "I think that, considering how very badly you have behaved, the wisest thing you can do is to—is to kiss me."

There was just time.

"And that means?" he said, delightedly.

"It means," she said, "that I am very, very happy."

Out you go, special train to Southampton. Go slowly for a space, mind, because there are folk in the train who are reluctant to leave; go slowly, because there are hopes and ambitions among your passengers, and this start of yours is the first step toward their realization or their disappointment; go slowly, because a bearded man, with a look of content, is straining his sight to miss nothing of the picture of his future wife.

"Well," said Eva Langham to herself, shyly, "this has been a busy twenty minutes."—Woman at Home.

PLATE GLASS.

Great Care and Skill Required in Its Manufacture.

A visit to a plate glass works reveals nothing perhaps more interesting than the casting tables on which the heavy plate glass used in most store windows is cast.

"The casting tables," said the Superintendent of a large New York plate glass factory to a Star reporter recently, "are the most important pieces of apparatus in this establishment. Each table is about 20 feet long, 15 feet wide, and from 7 to 8 inches thick. The heavy strips of iron on either side of the tables afford a bearing for the rollers and determine the thickness or diameter of the glass to be cast.

"The rough plate is commonly nine sixteenths of an inch thick, but after polishing it is reduced to six or seven sixteenths. All casting tables are mounted on wheels which run on a track made to reach every furnace and annealing oven in the factory. The table having been wheeled as near as possible to the melting furnace, a pot of molten glass is lifted by means of a crane, and its contents poured thickly out on the table. A heavy iron roller then passes from end to end, spreading the glass to a uniform thickness. This rolling operation has to be done by expert hands quickly, as the boiling glass, when it comes in contact with the cold metal of the table cools very rapidly. When the rolling process has been completed, the door of the annealing oven is opened and the plate glass is introduced. The floor of the annealing oven is on the same level as the wheels of the casting table, so that the transfer can be made by rail quickly. When the glass is ready to be taken out of the oven its surface is very rough. In this condition it is used for skylights and other purposes where strength is desired rather than transparency. But when intended for windows it is ground, smoothed and polished, and is then ready for the market."—Washington Star.

Fun Enough.

If you would enjoy your work, go about it as if it were a game you were sat upon winning. According to the Detroit Free Press, a certain old farmer learned this secret—which is not a new one—while watching two "city fellows" playing chess. The game was long, and he ventured to interrupt it.

"Excuse me," he said, "but the object of both of you is to git them wooden objects from where they are over to where they ain't?"

"That partly expresses it," replied one of the players.

"And you have to be continually on the lookout for surprises and difficulties?"

"Constantly."

"And if you ain't mighty keerful, you're goin' to lose some on 'em?"

"Yes."

"An' then there's that other game that you dress up odd fur, an' play with long sticks an' a little ball."

"You mean golf."

"I think prob'ly that's what I mean. Is that game amusin'?"

"It's quite interesting, and the exercise is very beneficial."

"Well, I reckon it's a mighty good joke on me."

"To what do you refer?"

"The way I've been havin' fun without knowin' anything about it. If you gentlemen reely want to enjoy yourselfs, you come over an' git me to let you drive pigs. You git all the walkin' you want, an' the way you have to watch fur surprises, an' figger so's not to lose 'em, would tickle you 'most to death."

Fifty Years of Preparation.

"It is marvelous, Mr. President," said a correspondent once to Thiers, the former head of the French republic, "how you deliver long, improvised speeches about which you have not had time to reflect." "You are not paying me a compliment," he replied; "it is criminal in a statesman to improvise speeches on public affairs. The speeches you call improvised—why, for fifty years I have been rising at 5 o'clock in the morning to prepare them."

A man's work shows whether he has expended the last ounce of his strength upon any achievement or has an unused reserve.

Do not mistake acquirement or mere knowledge for power. Like food, these things must be digested and assimilated to become life or force. Learning is not wisdom; knowledge is not necessarily vital energy. The student who has to cram through a school or a college course, who has made himself merely a receptacle for the teacher's thoughts and ideas, is not educated; he has not gained much. He is a reservoir, not a fountain. One retains, the other gives forth. Unless his knowledge is converted into wisdom, into faculty, it will become stagnant like still water.

Every man who has not experienced either a burglar or a baby in the house, claims that he is a light sleeper.

When a woman looks at a man he never knows whether she is admiring him, or thinking how homely he is.

CLEARING A UNITED STATES MAN-O'-WAR FOR ACTION.

"SPONGE AND LOAD."

A FIGHTING craft, cleared for action, loses much of its resemblance to the vessel as it lies in a harbor on a mission of peace, says the St. Louis Republic. The lines and halyards which stretch in all directions disappear; the graceful davits go below, the canvas awnings, the coils of hawser, the ship's boats, and every article useless in the fight are taken below deck, to the designated place for each. This action is necessary in order that the men may have plenty of room to work, and it also lessens the danger, as, mayhap a shell which would go clear of the ship strikes a steel line or other light obstruction and falls upon deck, destroying many lives and perhaps exploding a load of powder which sends the vessel to the bottom.

At the signal to clear every man on board runs to his post. The yardmen handle the halyards, the canvasmen look to the coverings and others to the boats. If a ship is at anchor the boats are dropped over the side, after their plugs are drawn, as it is then possible to raise them after the fight. If at sea they are thrown over to take care of themselves. This is done for the reason that men most fear amid a shower of shot and shell the flying, jagged splinters of wood that are thrown about when a boat is struck by a shot. Experience in the civil war taught the men that the wounds made by these splinters were not only as dangerous as those made by bullets, but far more painful.

While the boats are being taken care of, other squads of men are removing the stanchions, the running rails, the sides of the bridge and everything that can be put below the armored deck. Down in the boiler rooms the fires are already being spread, forced draughts applied in order to have the greatest amount of possible power on hand should it be required.

In the meantime the decks have been sprinkled with sand to prevent the men from slipping as they run back and forth, and at the call "to general quarters" they jump to their assigned places. The captain's position is in the conning tower, from which place he has electrical connection with every part of his ship. From the interior of this turret he can watch every part of the ship, and has a view of the horizon in all directions. The pressing of a button regulates the speed of the vessel, another guides her course, a third controls all the guns, directs the training of them and allows the captain to fire one or all, in groups or one crushing broadside.

While the men are awaiting the attack in general quarters, down below, the ship's doctor and his assistants are also preparing for the struggle. As a usual thing the sick bay, or ship's hospital, is too small for use in a battle of any length, and other quarters are provided, usually in one of the mess cabins. Here the surgeons hurry with their operating tables, their shining tools, their baskets full of bandages and chests of drugs and antiseptics. The baymen, as the nurses on board the ship are known, stand ready to care for their comrades as they are brought down on stretchers, torn and mangled by shells and flying iron.

LOWERING THE WOUNDED INTO THE SICK BAY.

There, below the decks, as unconscious as the engineers and firemen of the trend of the battle, must the surgeon and nurses work, their hands always steady, their nerves firm and with no thought of anything but the work before them. Not until the order of "Cease firing" rings out under the victorious flag above them, or they feel the list of the ship as it sinks, do they know how the fight is going. And if the ship is struck they go down only with the consciousness of duty well performed. Too often their bravery is lost sight of in the more pretentious acts of others.

With every man in place, every detail looked after and a knowledge that nothing save an accident can cause his plans to miscarry, the captain stands on the bridge with glass in hand and watches the approaching enemy. Above him on the fore military mast an officer is surveying the distance between the two vessels. As he makes his observations the result is called out by a lieutenant.

By this time both vessels are in full view. If the day is calm and the air clear, the men on the one iron monster can see the other, with its flags flying from every point where they can be attached. They can see the polished muzzles of the heavy rifles as they gleam in the sun, the glitter of the officers' buttons. With muscles strained, their hearts thumping in their breasts and all excitement, they listen as the lieutenant's voice calls out clear:

"Five thousand four hundred meters; five thousand two hundred meters; five thousand——"

The Battle Begins.

The rest seems buried in the great silence as there is a puff of white smoke from the side of one of the great crafts that seem so far away; there is a sound, like the rush of a great train, that turns instantly into a roar, a hissing sound as a great ball of fire drops into the water a few hundred yards away with a great splash and a muffled explosion below the surface that sends the sea spouting up like a fantastic fountain.

The battle has begun. The steady plomb, plomb of heavy guns, the sharp, rapid, cracking shots of the quick fire guns as they blaze out a stream of death, the patter of iron balls against the steel plates of the ship, the louder, tearing crash of heavy shots, the shouts of officers, the rumble of trucks loaded with projectiles over the deck, the smoke and dust and noise, aye, and the cry of comrades as they fall, torn and bleeding. Such is war!

After the first shot the intensity of suspense is broken, the sight of the mangled forms on deck is blotted out by smoke that stings the eyes until they pain like balls of fire, and the men fall into their work like veterans. They forget everything except the fight, and it is not until the engagement is over that they notice their bleeding wounds and realize the terrible amount of energy and force that has been expended.

While there have been but few battles since the introduction of the ironclad, enough is known that the strain on the men is something awful. The ceaseless din of heavy shot on the heavier plates, the tremendous concussions from the heavy guns cause hemorrhage, destroy the nerves and actually blister the flesh.

WAITING FOR THE FIRST SHOT.

Men who have been in turrets and taken no part in the conflict have come out of the steel towers with their clothes in shreds and so unnerved that weeks of rest was necessary for recuperation.

The possibilities of naval warfare under these conditions are a matter of conjecture. Engagements will, of necessity, be short. Squadrons may be destroyed in a day, whole cities laid low by the tremendous force.

Spain's Substitutes for Telephones.

In Spain, where the telephone is largely used in place of the telegraph, an ingenious application of the phonograph to record the telephonic messages has been made. The receiving operator repeats the message into a phonograph, from which it can afterward be transcribed at leisure. This saves the delay caused by writing the message during its reception and insures greater accuracy, because the repetition of the message for the phonograph is heard simultaneously by the original sender at the other end of the line.

Some people laugh as if it hurt them.

A MODERN NAVAL BATTLE.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, MAY 6 1898

Union: The need of Hawaii to the United States is now significantly pressed upon our attention. Two of our most distinguished officers have testified before a senate committee that the possession of the islands is a military and naval necessity. We are now engaged in a war that in part is to be fought out in Asiatic waters. Our navy there is nearly 6000 miles from a base, and is therefore, under present conditions in a precarious position. Hawaii is one third of the way to Manila, and if we possessed that territory, which is the key to the Pacific, our Asiatic fleet would be 2,000 miles nearer home and complete efficiency.

A steamship from San Francisco for the Phillipines ought to coal at Hawaii. If not, she must sacrifice carrying capacity, and at the end of her journey may be found to be unable to make quick return for lack of coaling facilities, as is true in this war.

It is fortunate for us that the Republic of Hawaii has announced its willingness to take the position of an ally, and not to shut us out of her ports by a declaration of neutrality. By that action she invites assault from Spain in our interest True, it may be said that it is good politics on the part of the Hawaiin government, which wishes to be annexed to the United States, but it is legitimate politics, and as it invites possible disaster it is courageous politics. We ought to respond by immediate approval of the annexation treaty.

Privateering

A privateer is an armed ship owned and officered by private persons, but bearing a commission known as letters of marque. This commission authorizes the holder to proceed with his ship and seize vessels of the enemy or capture towns and ports and to receive the spoils as prize money.

The right to use this order of offensive force rests upon the same groundwork as the right to accept the services of a force of soldiers raised by parties, paid and maintained by them, and having no regular commission in our army of either class, regular or volunteers. Such bodies may be accepted and placed under our orders, though not directly connected with the forces of the Government.

The privateer is prompted always by greed. If patriotism moved him, he would tender his services direct to the Navy Department. But he outfits for the prize money there is in the business. His crew naturally is made up of characters of off color; adventurers, men who are actuated solely by hope of gain. Naturally the privateer has but slight control over such a crew. He is often quite as much in danger from them as from the guns of the enemy, and these he avoids always, since he is never equipped to meet a regular naval vessel. His object is to prey on commerce, make seizures and bring in a great amount of booty. Thus privateering even at its best, is but one step removed from piracy.

By the Congress of Paris in 1856 the great powers declared against the employment of privateers, but the United States and Spain declined to sign the compact under that head. In declining to accede to the new arrangement, our Secretary of State, Mr. Marcy, said to the powers that we would readily agree to an arrangement by which the private property of the subjects or citizens of a belligerent power should be exempt from seizure by public armed vessels of the enemy, "except contraband of war." But the powers would not, certainly did not, reply agreeing to this exception.

So it remains that ever since the United States has held to the right to issue letters of marque, and thus commission privateers. Within a few days, however the Government has given notice that while it does not abandon the right it will not in this war employ it, and Spain has now announced that she reserves her right to employ privateers whenever she feels that her interests demand such additional force to be put into the naval field in her behalf.

The practice of privateering is attended by so many abuses, is so nearly allied to barbarism, and is so objectionable from moral standpoints that we can understand very well why the United States Government should now decline to exercise the right to employ this agency of war. Her declination has unquestionably placed her in a most favorable light before the nations of Europe.

It requires very little thought for any one to realize how evil privateering is, and how hard pushed a nation should be before it employs it as an aid to warfare. The personnel of the privateering craft below the position of commander is generally of the lawless class; hardened men whose sympathies are dull and whose sensibilities are deadened, are preferred for such crews. To slit a throat or cast a human being overboard is no more to most of these fellows than the same kind of treatment to a dog.

If a privateer takes prisoners they are encumbrances, and to be got rid of as speedily as possible. They should be brought to port, but many die of starvation and ill treatment in privateering ships. When a privateering crew comes ashore with its plunder it riots uproariously, and by its conduct, excesses and recitals fire hundreds of men to engage in the legalized freebooting, and thus a most pernicious poison is injected into the veins of community thought.

If Spain lets privateers loose upon our commerce we will probably be moved to retaliate in kind, though the hope may be entertained that our government will refuse to do so. It would be far better if auxiliary aid is needed to fit out ships offering such as are usually sailed by privateer commanders as commerce destroyers, commission them regularly under the law, govern them as the rules of the navy require for the revenue service, or hold them to the same accountability as are other ships of the navy. That is to say, it will be better to take these private ships regularly into the service and hold them to the same obligations imposed upon the regular navy.—Sac. Union.

WAR NEWS.

11.20 a m—Sampson bombarded San Juan, Porto Rico, yesterday and done considerable damage. American fleet escaped with slight damage. 1 man killed on the New York, several wounded. Unofficial advices say that San Juan surrendered at six last night.

May 13—5 p. m—Long received official information this morning that Spanish fleet has arrived Martinique Islands, 600 miles south of Porto Rico. Fleet consists of 7 first-class vessels—four armored cruisers and 3 destroyers, which left Cape Verde two weeks ago. Upon receipt of news Schley put to sea at once, presumably to intercept Spanish fleet.

Gibraltar—Second Spanish is now at Cadiz. Consists of battleship, 3 cruisers and two auxiliary cruisers. Will escort strong military force to Phillipines.

London—Lloyd's agents at Manila cable via Hong Kong that strict order is maintained. Cable repaired and aboard American vessel.

Madrid—Official dispatch says. 11 American war ship attack San Juan, but were gloriously beaten off.

New York—Special from St. Thomas says Sampson left San Juan to meet Spanish near Martinque.

May 5—Cruisers Marblehead and Nashville and auxiliary Cruiser Windom steamed into Cienfugo with order to cut cable connecting Havana and Santiago de Cuba. The task was accomplished after a teriffic conflict with several thousand Spanish troops, aided by a temporary fort consisting of an old light house. The warships laid off about a thousand yards, and several small boats were sent to grapple the cable. They were allowed to work about an hour when they were suddenly fired on by the big guns from the light house, also the rifles of the infantry. Heroic Treatment of Patients.

The hospital physician should be a man of the most thorough methods and the most extreme conservatism. He should be chosen as much for his practical good sense as for his skill in diagnosing disease. He should be a man with intuitions and ought to be able to decide almost at a glance whether a patient is suffering from brain trouble or alcoholism.

There have been of late a great many instances where this mistake has been made, and it is by no means creditable to the hospital authorities when such blunders are made.

One of the latest exploits of a hospital doctor was to order a cold bath for a consumptive patient who showed some symptoms of hysteria. Shortly after the bath the woman died. Just why a doctor should order such treatment common sense as well as the medical profession would like very much to know.

Hospitals are in the main supported by the people, and the people have a right to good treatment and courtesy at the hands of those who are put in charge of such institutions. Failing to receive this, the public has also the right to demand an investigation of the situation and to demand the punishment of those who are guilty of such unprofessional and inhuman conduct and that their places be filled by those who are more intelligent and better fitted for the duties and responsibilities of such a place.—New York Ledger.

At the preliminary examination of Manuel C. de Borba, before Judge Davidson this morning, the defendant was held to appear before the Superior cout and answer to the charge of murder, without bail.

INYO COUNTY, CAL., March 15, 1898.

To MRS. E. R. Stillman:—

You are hereby notified that I have expended three hundred ($300) dollars in labor and improvements upon the mining claim known as the Golden Treasure, Bunker Hill and Hidden Treasure, being situated in South Park Mining District, Inyo county, Cal., one mile west of Antelope spring in Butte Valley, as will appear by certificate filed August 15, 1896, in the office of the recorder of said county in order to hold said premises under the provisions of Section 2324 revised statutes of the United States, being the amount required to hold the same for the year ending December 1897, and if in ninety (90) days after this notice by publication you fail or refuse to contribute your proportion of such expenditure as a co-owner your interest in said claims will become the property of the subscriber under said section 2324.

SANDY MACDONALD

In the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of Edwin M. Crocker, Deceased.

It is therefore ordered by the Judge of said court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the said superior Court on Saturday, the 14th day of May, 1898, at ten o'clock a. m. of said day, at the court-room of said superior Court, at the town of Independence, in the county of Inyo, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell all the personal property and so much of the real estate of the said deceased either at public or private sale as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for 4 successive weeks in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper printed and published in said Inyo county.

Real Estate Transfers.

Wah Lee to S. Levy—lot in Independence, $150.

Jos. Seely to T. B. Rickey—tract of land, $500.

Geo. Montgomery to A. C. Finley, half interest in La Plata and Money mines, Funeral mountains. $5.

Jacob Wolfe to Frederike Rhine, certain lots in Ballarat, $1.

Croquet is now the prevailing fad.

Jas. McNally came down from Laws yesterday.

Mrs. Marie Fitzgerald is visiting with friends at Independence.

E. H. Edwards of Lone Pine spent Tuesday in Independence.

Fred. C. Scott of Bishop came down yesterday, returning today.

There was quite a heavy fall of snow in the mountains Monday.

Henry Levy returned Monday, after a few weeks spent in San Francisco.

Sheep-chasing is over, and the "unemployed" are now out of a job.

W. K. Miller, the Mojave stage owner, was at Independence last Saturday.

The weather has been quite cold for the past week, with storms on the mountains.

A. W. Eibeshutz went to Bishop last Saturday, returning Monday and taking in Big Pine on the way.

Dr. Doyle has leased the Gill residence for a year, and will continue to use it for office purposes.

W. B. Moore and family left for Darwin to-day, where they will make their future home.

J. H. Durfee, a first-class watchmaher and jeweler, is now located at the Norman House.

The dancing club will give another dance tomorrow evening. Music by Maclack's orchestra.

Dan Lewis is in town after an absence of several months, spent at his mine near Fish Springs.

J. W. Murphy has returned from the desert, where he amassed a competence catching sheep.

The family of Weather Observer J. J. McLean will arrive on tonight's train from Eureka, Humboldt county.

We have had an influx of traveling men lately. There are now in town a dentist, a photographer and a watchmaker.

Jeff Moffett and Chas. Cottle of Santa Monica, who have been visiting the family of J. R. Moffett, left for their home Wednesday.

Dr. W. T. Covington, dentist, with Adams Bros., Los Angeles, will be at Mairs' hotel for a week or ten days, and will do work at Los Angeles prices while here.

A. W. Lord, watchmaker and jeweler, who spent a few weeks in Independence not long ago, is now permanently located in Bishop, office at Geo. W. Dixon's drug store. 4t

Sheriff Given and Deputy Dave Hollann returned Wednesday from San Francisco, having in charge Manuel C. de Borba, charged with the murder of Mariano Canados.

Supt. Ben H. Hoskins of the Reward mine was in Wednesday with another good-sized bar of bullion. Hoskins has the distinction of being the first man in Owens River valley to wear a genuine war necktie.

Henry Levy will in a short time commence some radical improvements on his hotel property. A second story will be added, and other alterations will be made that will tend to raise the Independence Hotel above even its present high standard.

Billy Hearst's San Francisco paper has some reporters in its employ whose imagination is lurid. The account of the capture of de Borba reads like a romance. A few mistakes were made in regard to details, but such little things do not count with the great newspaper that gives away ranches to induce people to subscribe.

The Weather Bureau

The San Francisco Call has this to say of our local weather bureau:

"A weather bureau has been re-established in the little town of Independence, Inyo county, and is in charge of Observer J. J. McLean. The geographical position of this station is a fine one for weather observations, situated as it is northwest of an immense stretch of territory six hundred miles long by about two hundred miles wide, occupying the outpost of this area.

"This section contains the highest and the lowest land in America with the exception of Alaska. Mount Whitney, over 15,000 feet high, is sixteen miles from Independence, covered with perpetual snow, while violets are to be seen growing in winter at the base of the mountain near Lone Pine. On the other hand, Death Valley, in this district, is 400 feet below the level of the sea.

"Climatically, the weather station occupies one of the dryest spots on the Pacific coast, the percentage of humidity frequently going as low as 4 per cent. when the winds are brisk and northerly; its opposite being Eureka, Humboldt county, on the north, where the average humidity far exceeds that figure. Therefore from its geographical and favorable climatic situation, Independence will be an excellent place to study meteorological phenomena.

"The station is to be equipped with a complete set of self-recording instruments by the United States Department of Agriculture after July 1, 1898. Its instruments at present are a self-register, showing wind velocity, thermometers, barometers, rain and snow gauges and wind vane, and these are sufficiet to render the data gathered there of great importance to the forecast officials of the Pacific coast. Daily forecasts are distributed as widely as the limited mail facilities will allow, and this station will fill a long felt want in that section of the State, and the results obtained will be invaluable.

A Local Magnate

Omie Mairs has now reached the high and lofty pedestal of a goverment contractor. He has not only leased the upper story of the Norman House for the weather bureau at a figure that would make the most of us green with envy, but he has also secured the contract for carrying the mails between the depot and Independence.

"It never rains but it pours," says an old saw. On top of all the above named good news comes word that an oil well on Omie's lot in Los Angeles has struck quicksand, and pipe big enough to convey the "ile" is scarce. One or more millions added to Omie's pile does not deter him from pursuing the even tenor of his way, and he Norman house will keep on as usual.

At the Nebraska experiment station cattle not accustomed to alfalfa pasture have a common straight bar bridle bit put into their mouths before turning into the field. They are compelled to wear this bit for several days or until they become accustomed to the green alfalfa. this treatment is believed to be efficient in preventing bloat, as no cases have occurred since the method was adopted. The theory of prevention is that in eating with the bit in the mouth an animal is compelled to eat slowly, so that an abundance of saliva to counteract acids which might be generated in the stomach is swallowed along with the food. When the animal's system becomes accustomed to the alfalfa there is little danger of bloating and the bit may be removed with safety.

A Hint From the Klondike.

Joseph Ladue, the famous trapper and miner and the present owner of Dawson City, and for many years the agent of the Alaska Commercial Company, gives a hint to persons going to Alaska, and pays great compliment to a well known article. He writes:

"I have always used the Royal Baking Powder in Alaska and Northwest Territory, as no other gave equal satisfaction in that harsh climate. I also found my customers always insisted on having that brand."

Just His Luck.

"I'll pay no more," shouted Gimbly when the insurance agent called on him. "No more accident policy for me. Let 'er lapse. It's just the same as burning money for me. No use in arguin or jollyin now. I'm done donatin. I wouldn't give a dollar on the million to be insured against accident."

"What's the matter, man? Our company's good as gold."

"I don't care whether it is or not. I'm accident proof. When I was learnin to ride my bicycle, I fell off 200 times by actual count and never as much as sprained a finger. I was in a runaway where four other people were all jammed up, and I didn't have a scratch. Two months ago I was in that railroad wreck, and every living soul in the car but myself was hurt. I fell off the street car this morning, dropped through the open cellar door when I went home to lunch and was standing right beside my stable man when a horse kicked him clear across the barn, and I'm just as sound as the day I took out that policy. That's just my infernal luck. Not another dollar will you get out of me."

The next day Gimbly was laid up with a twisted back incurred by tossing the baby in the air.—Detroit Free Press.

Keeping Fish Alive.

Some time ago I had the pleasure of visiting Flensburg, a seaport town on the east coast of Sleswick-Holstein, and was much struck with the system I there observed of bringing to port fish which was intended for immediate consumption.

Instead of packing the fish in the hold of the vessel the fishermen use flat, oblong boxes drilled with holes to allow free access of water, and into these the live fish are placed as soon as caught and are towed under water.

By this means the fish are kept alive until the harbor is reached, and they are then taken out of the boxes and sold alive on the quay, so that there can be no question as to their absolute freshness.—Strand Magazine.

THAT SETTLES IT.

With the bloom and beauty of the season, its balmy airs and delightful temperature, we feel like living with new life, and are therefore often very careless in taking care of ourselves. It is this forgetfulness that lays us liable to attacks of rheumatism, the more liable because we think there is little danger of its coming on, but rheumatism is an easy thing to take and sometimes a hard thing to get rid of unless we take the advice of others and learn that the best way possible is to use St. Jacobs Oil. It has been used so long as a sure cure that this advice is given in good faith from the testimony of thousands.

Preparations are being made so that the guns can be loaded, in case the report of the court inquiry should be.

GREAT BENEVOLENCE.

In the large cities of the United States the condition of the metropolitan poor is constantly being ameliorated by the grand benevolences of wealthy people. Sanitary reforms are frequently suggested and carried out with earnestness and intelligence. Among sanitary reforms those produced by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters in dyspeptic stomach, disordered liver, bowels or nervous system are very conspicuous.

"Now," said the professor in natural history, "take the case of a hen. Why does it lay an egg?" "Because it can't lay a carp," replied the bright boy of the class.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

THE TELL-TALE TICK.

I had knocked around in Australia for five years, put in a year's service in India, and had a whack at the Transvaal insurrectionists as a volunteer, only to settle down at last, as a telegraph operator at Rocky Forks, a telegraph station between Omaha and Sioux City. It was my business to transfer messages between the two places, and to connect with points further along.

The next station, fifteen miles further up the road, was Dismal Point, and here Tom Brown, my oldest and truest friend, operated. Tom and I had roughed it all over the world together, and when we settled down here it was to be near each other.

One day Tom telegraphed down to me that he would meet me at Rocky Forks next Tuesday for a day's shooting. He said he would come down on the 5 o'clock train in the morning and wait for me to get off at noon. After that we would go up into the hills and shoot along the points of the ravine.

I liked nothing better than a day's outing with Tom, and I quickly ticked back word that he could rely on me next Tuesday, as that was my day off.

The following day there came a message through Omaha that the United Express would ship $12,000,000 in bullion over the road to Sioux City the next Monday night, and that the train would pass through my station, Rocky Forks, at 8:15 in the evening. I telegraphed back that I understood it, and then I opened up the instrument and asked Tom if he had received his message yet. He said that he had, and would look for the train seventeen minutes earlier at Dismal Point.

That day and the next I passed in my usual way. Sunday was uneventful, and would have seemed long, except for the constant ticking of the instrument, which was kept busy sending messages about the important shipment to be made the next day. Monday evening at 7:30 I looked at my watch. "The train will soon be along," I said. "I guess I will call up Tom, and see if he knows where it is."

A DAGGER STICKING THROUGH HIM, PINNING HIM TO THE DESK.

I called up Dismal Point, and Tom answered.

"The express train is one station up the road," said he, "and is ahead of time. It will wait here five minutes. I'll let you know as soon as it leaves here. Tomorrow——"

There was a sudden pause in the ticking and then a strange hand sent the message, "That is all."

I called up Tom again, but he did not answer. I kept calling, but no response came, and I thought that the wires had become entangled.

I waited for the express with its $12,000,000 in bullion until 8:15, but it did not arrive. Then I telegraphed up road to Tom, but there was no answer. I waited five minutes longer and telegraphed again, but still no response.

"The wires must be down," I said.

I walked out upon the platform and looked up the road. To my surprise I saw in the distance an engine coming toward me, slowly swinging down the track. As it came nearer I saw it was empty, and as it passed me I boarded it.

Reversing the engine, I started back up the road. I went with such fire as I could get up, back to Dismal Point. Here, in front of the station, stood the express car, rifled of its contents. Across one of the trunks the express messenger lay dead. The engineer and fireman were so badly stunned that at first I thought they, too, were killed, but after some time I brought breath back into the life of the former. He, poor fellow, was too dazed to speak, and I lifted him into the car, thankful that he was alive.

When I stepped into the little station where Tom always sat, an awful sight met my eyes. There sitting at the instrument with his back to the door, was my old friend, a dagger sticking through him, and fairly pinning him to the table. I grasped the wooden handle, and pulled it out with all my strength, only to receive his cold body in my arms.

Well! they never found out the robbers of the train. The engineer had been struck from behind, and could remember nothing; and after waiting only long enough to see my old friend buried, I resigned my position at Rocky Forks, and struck out again. But on Tom's grave, back in the woods at Dismal Point, I put a shaft of wood, and on it I carved these words: "Living, I will pursue you to the end of the world. Dead, I will come back to you."

Below it I put Tom's name and age, and vowed aloud the oath that I had there written, to find the murderer of poor Tom Brown.

Three years later, I found myself stationed at New Elsworth, a suburb of New York. I was in charge of a private wire connecting with the New Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company, which communicated with all parts of the world. It was one of the richest organizations of the new world, and I was proud to be an operator in its employ.

My duty here was to transmit the private messages of the company; for here the president had his summer home, and here also were the trustees, and those who manipulated the road. Many confidential messages passed through my hands, and I treated them with becoming confidence.

I never liked the president of the company, though he lived in the handsomest house in the place and treated me with uniform courtesy. He had a cold uncertain manner that did not seem to be worthy of trust. Certainly I should not have put my millions into his hands.

One night, when he did not reach home, his wife came down to the telegraph office and asked me if I had heard from him. I was forced to tell her no. This happened frequently; and one evening, when he had been late and she had made three trips in her carriage to the telegraph office, he said to me: "To-morrow I will have a private wire put in my office in Pine street and when I am detained, I will telegraph you, and you can send a message to my wife."

The next day the wire was put in, but as the president came home promptly that night, it was not used. But on the following day at 5 o'clock I got a telegram from him telling me that he would not be home until 8 o'clock, and ordering me to send word to his wife. I did so by the station messenger.

An hour later there came another message from the president's office. It was that he would be detained still later, and telling me to send word home to that effect.

"Is that all?" I asked.

The message came back in sharp staccato notes:

"That is all." I leaned back in my chair cold and faint, for the hand was the same that had sent me the message on the night poor Tom Brown was killed.

The next day I came to the city on a leave of absence to investigate the life of Anson Tryson, president of the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company. I found that three years before he had been a laborer on the Sioux City Railroad, with not a dollar to his name, and that his sudden rise had been the talk of Wall street.

Well, I did not let it drop there, but I hunted down the case until I proved that Anson Tryson, with a gang of accomplices, had robbed the express train that night, and killed my old friend Tom Brown. And one day I took a trip up country to see him swing for it.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Dinner Customs.

We are so accustomed to ladies and gentlemen going in pairs to the dining room that we are astonished to learn that this was not considered good form by our grandparents. The custom is of comparatively recent origin. Even now in many homes the lady of the house, true to the old fashion, leads the way to the table, followed by the other ladies in single file, the gentlemen bringing up the rear.

A writer back in 1790 tells us that his mother was greatly shocked, on board a man-of-war, when the captain asked her to "take his arm" on the way to dinner. She spoke afterwards of the "fellow's impudence" in so doing.

Another writer, in 1862, speaks of a lady who died in 1840—whose daughter was born in 1798—having "the horrors" when she first saw a lady "hook herself to the arm of a gentleman in a ball room." She remarked with indignation:

"If my daughter did that I should take her home immediately."

The colored girl baby is born to blush unseen.

CURLING IN AMERICA.

A Scotch Game Zealously Cultivated by Scotchmen.

The game of curling has secured a firm place among the winter sports in all parts of the country where there is heavy ice and where there are Scotchmen to teach the game to their American neighbors. There are about 50 curling clubs in the United States, and the Grand National Curling club of America has a membership of many hundreds in all parts of the north and northwest, but still the game is spoken of as "Scotland's ain game."

The game is always played on ice covered lakes or rivers, except in England, where it is frequently played under glass roofs by men whose white waistcoats, straw hats, floral decorations and general lack of Scotch style cause the real curlers to regard them with scorn.

The curlers who are members of the New York clubs have their contests on Van Cortlandt lake, and there is probably no class of sportsmen who go about a game so seriously as they.

The object of the game is to plant the curling stone, which has a teakettle shape and weighs from 32 to 44 pounds, near the "tee," or center of a circle at a distance of 40 yards, and to guard it there.

Next to the stone the broom plays the most important part in the game of curling, because in the hands of a sweeper who is anxious to see the stone advance to the circle where it will count it is wielded dexterously, so that every particle of snow or ice may be removed from the stone's course. The "skips," or captains, of the opposing sides have charge of the sweeping departments, and the sweepers have the right to use their brooms after the stone has got beyond the line which marks the middle of the rink. The sweeping is always to a side or across the rink and not forward or backward, where the sweepings might obstruct the passage of a running stone.

Match games, called a bonspiel, are played by opposing teams of four each, and when it is at home curling is essentially democratic. It has been said that the lord of the manor, the clergyman and the village blacksmith may be seen on the same rink with the smith as "skip" shouting to the clergyman to "soop, soop!" when he thinks a "soop," or sweep, in front of the moving stone will help it along.

The enthusiastic curler sees and hears nothing but the speeding stones and the applause, the shouts of "Weel curled, mon!" and the boyish shouts which rise on the wintry air show that a youthful spirit may live in a mature body, particularly if it be that of a Scotch curler.—New York Tribune.

THE STANDARD OF LIVING.

Its Direct Relation to the Scale of Labor's Wages.

The price of labor in the same industries differs in different localities or markets, not because the skill of laborers so greatly differs or because there is great diversity in the supply and demand for laborers, but because the cost of production (the cost of living) greatly differs in different localities. Thus, in New York city, carpenters, masons, printers and other mechanics get for the same work 50 and sometimes 100 per cent more than in some other localities. While the cost of living is sometimes affected by the difference in prices of particular articles of consumption it is usually determined largely by the difference in the social style of living. The greater the variety of the things consumed and comforts enjoyed by the laborers the higher is their standard of living and the greater their expenses or cost of living. Now, it is universally true in all countries and localities that in proportion as this standard of living, or social expense of the laborer's family, rises among any class of laborers, wages rise, hence they are always highest in large cities and lowest in remote country districts.

It may be laid down, then, as a general principle that wages for similar labor in any given market are governed by the local standard of living of the laborers. Consequently all efforts to improve the condition of the laboring class, to be efficacious, must be directed toward increasing the influences which raise the standard of living among the laboring class. In no other way can a permanent increase of wages be secured, and it may be added that no scheme for social reform which does not tend to promote this end can be of any real benefit to the wage class.—Gunton's Magazine.

Appetite of the Florida Alligator.

The Florida alligator has an appetite that is hard to appease. A fisherman, weary with ill luck, pulled off his boots, stretched himself on the river's green bank and went to sleep. A saurian in search of a dinner spied the sleeping fisherman, crawled up the bank, swallowed him and retired in good order. But after a time he remembered that the late fisherman's boots were also reposing on the bank. A dinner without dessert was no dinner at all, so he returned to taper off on the boots. But while he was in the act of swallowing them another fisherman, recently arrived, shot him dead. Probably the moral in this story is, "Some alligators never know when they have enough."

How Are You This Spring?

Tired, nervous?
Can't get rested?
Tortured with boils, humors?

That is not strange. Impurities have been accumulating in your blood during winter and it has become impoverished. This is the experience of most people. Therefore they take Hood's Sarsaparilla to purify their blood in spring.

Mrs. E. Cheesman of Jamul, California, says: "I was afflicted with a tired feeling and my blood was in such a condition that every little scratch would develop into a sore. I tried several medicines but did not feel satisfied with the result until I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. I am now well and strong, and weigh more than I ever did in my life."

L'OLONNOIS, THE CRUEL.

He Was the Most Ferocious of All the Famous Buccaneers.

Frank R. Stockton is writing "The Bucaneers of Our Coast" in St. Nicholas. In a late number he says: Among the buccaneer leaders who distinguished themselves as land pirates was Francis L'Olonnois, a Frenchman. In those days it was the custom to enforce servitude upon people who are not able to take care of themselves; unfortunate debtors and paupers of all classes were sold to people who had need of their services. Boys and girls were sold for a term of years, somewhat as if they had been apprentices; and it so happened that the boy L'Olonnois was sold to a master who took him to the West Indies. There he led the life of a slave until he was of age; and then, being no longer subject to ownership, he became one of the freest and most independent persons who ever walked this earth. He began his career on the island of Hispaniola, where he took up the business of hunting and butchering cattle, but he soon became a pirate, and enlisted as a common sailor on one of their ships. Here he gave signs of being so brave and unscrupulous that one of the leading pirates on the island of Tortuga gave him a ship and a crew, and set him up in business. The career of L'Olonnois was much like that of other buccaneers of the day except that he was abominably cruel to his Spanish prisoners.

All the barbarities attributed to the pirates of the world were united in the career of this wretch, who does not appear to be so good an example of the true pirate as Roc, the Brazilian. He was not so brave, he was not so able, and it would be impossible for any one to look upon him as a hero. After having attained in a short time the reputation of being the wickedest pirate of his day, L'Olonnois was unfortunate enough to be wrecked upon the coast near Campeachy. He and his crew came safely to shore, but it was not long before their presence was discovered by the people of the town, and the Spanish soldiers attacked them. There was a fierce fight, but the Spaniards were stronger, and the buccaneers were utterly defeated. Many were killed, wounded, or taken prisoners.

Among the wounded was L'Olonnois, and when the Spaniards walked over the battlefield, he was looked upon as killed. When the soldiers had retired, he stealthily arose and made his way into the woods, where he stayed until his wounds were well enough for him to walk about. He divested himself of his great boots, his pistol-belt, and the rest of his piratical costume, and adding to his scanty raiment a cloak and hat which he had stolen from a poor cottage, he boldly approached the town, and entered it. He looked like a very ordinary person, and no notice was taken of him by the authorities. Here he found shelter and something to eat, and he soon began to make himself very much at home in the streets of Campeachy.

How to Rise Early.

Thomas and Simms live opposite each other in a narrow street. They were going on a fishing excursion the other day, and as they wanted to be sure to wake in time to catch the early train, they ran a bit of clothesline across the street in at the second story windows, and each tied an end to his leg, so that if one awoke the other would immediately feel a pull, says Tit-Bits.

The scheme was an excellent one, and we know of no reason why, under ordinary circumstances, it should not have worked well.

But about five o'clock that morning some laborers assembled in front of Simms' for the purpose of erecting a telegraph pole. When the hole was dug they began to put the pole upon end. But, unfortunately, it slipped down with tremendous force upon the clothes-line.

Mrs. Simms was very much surprised to see Henry go over the foot of the bed and shoot feet foremost out of the window; but even she was not more amazed than Mrs. Thompson was when Archibald performed the same feat.

They met in the middle of the street, clustering as it were, round the pole, but each with a broken leg. They wake themselves now with alarm clocks. It is safer—and less exciting.

Apple Cores for Champagne.

The practice of the economies in the fruit-raising sections of the West has developed a new article of export. Until recently the orchard owners and the evaporator managers did not think of utilizing the cores and the parings of apples. They occasionally sold them to the jelly-makers or fed them to the hogs, but more generally allowed them to accumulate as refuse in great heaps, which slowly fermented and decayed. This year, in many places, the parings and the cores are being saved. They are spread out in the hot sun and dried, after which they are packed in large sacks and held for buyers, who gather them up and send away in car lots. The destination of the dried parings and cores in these large quantities is France. It is no secret that the refuse of the orchards of the Missouri valley and the Ozark country is now largely employed in the manufacture of champagne by the thrifty wine-makers of the vineclad slopes of France.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Lost on the Atlantic.

From March, 1840, until March, 1893, 122 trans-Atlantic vessels—steamships plying between Europe and America only—were lost en route, and as a direct result of this 6,369 lives were lost. The estimate of lives lost from various other causes is 600. The number of steamships never heard from after leaving port was 17. The number burned was 9, and the number foundered was 12. The other wrecks were caused by collisions, being washed ashore, collision with icebergs, etc. From March, 1893, to the beginning of the present year the loss of life on the Atlantic has been very much less than in former years, though one or two large steamers have had serious mishaps and one was never heard from.—Washington Times.

OLD ENGLISH LAWS.

The Unlimited Powers Which a Father Exercised Over His Offspring.

In England less than 100 years ago the husband had power to choose his wife's associates, to separate her from her relatives, to restrain her religious and personal freedom, and if the need could be shown even to chastise her moderately, as though she were a child. What constituted sufficient cause for corporal punishment was left for the husband to prove and the court to decide, but so universally was the mastery of a man over his wife's body recognized that a trial for wife beating was almost unheard of.

Under these old laws of England the father had power to dispose of his offspring, by deed or legacy, until they were 21 years of age, and the testamentary guardian's right over the children superseded that of the mother, who had absolutely no legal control over them and was entitled to nothing from them save their reverence and respect. She had no right even to their services, except in the case of the mother of an illegitimate child, who was entitled to its control and custody. Upon marriage the husband became entitled to the wife's goods and chattels, to the rentals and profits of her lands, to her earnings and to the custody of her person. In return he was bound only to supply her with shelter, food, clothing and medicine, which he could do out of her personal earnings, or out of the profits of her properties, should she be an heiress. If a father died intestate, his personal belongings were divided equally between his sons and daughters, but in the case of real property a son, though he be younger than all his sisters, was the sole heir. In England less than a century ago it was not unusual for a man to sell his wife into servitude.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

ABOUT CHANGE OF LIFE.

"I suffered for eight years, and could find no permanent relief until one year ago. My trouble was Change of Life. I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and relief came almost immediately. I have taken two bottles of the Vegetable Compound, three boxes of Pills, and have also used the Sanative Wash, and must say I have never had anything help so much. I have better health than I ever had in my life. I feel like a new person, perfectly strong. I give the Compound all the credit. I have recommended it to several of my friends who are using it with like results. It has cured me of several female diseases. I would not do without Mrs. Pinkham's remedies for anything. There is no need of so much female suffering. Her remedies are a sure cure."—MRS. ELLA KEINER, Knightstown, Henry Co., Ind.

THAT SWEET LOOK.

Time may set his fingers there,
Fix the smiles that curve about
Her winsome mouth, and touch her hair,
Put the curves of youth to rout;
But the "something" God put there,
That which drew me to her first,
Not the imps of pain and care,
Not all sorrow's fiends accurst,
Can kill the look that God put there.

Something beautiful and rare,
Nothing common can destroy;
Not all the leaden load of care,
Not all the dross of earth's alloy;
Better than all fame of gold,
True as only God's own truth,
It is something all hearts hold
Who have loved once in their youth.

That sweet look her face doth hold
Thus will ever be to me;
Joy may all her pinion sfold,
Care may come, and misery;
Through the days of murk and shine,
Though the roads be foul or fair,
I will see through love's glad eyne
That sweet look that God put there.

TURN OF THE TIDE.

FROM time immemorial it has been the fate of some men and women to work—of others to play. It was the fate of Hester Mainwaring to work always, and of Frank Thornton, the man she loved, to play.

Hester was sitting at the writing table in her small study in R—— street; she balanced a pen between her fingers while she listened to Frank, who walked impatiently up and down the room. He was a well-built man of the flashy type one so often sees worshiped by women.

"It is not an atom of good my staying in England, Hester; we cannot possibly marry, even with the help of the two or three hundred a year you make by your work. I shall exchange, and go to India, and in a few years you will have put by a certain amount, and I shall then be able to come home and marry you."

He paused and looked down at her. She laid aside her pen, and clasped her hands on her lap; the corners of her mouth twitched.

"If you think it better, Frank—if it will in any way advance you in your profession, go; but"—and then the woman in her came uppermost—"it is so very, very far away."

He laughed and touched her hair lightly.

"Of course it is, but there are the mails every week and one can get home easily enough nowadays."

"Very well, dear, then you must go, and I shall write pages every mail and expect you to do the same."

She smiled into his eyes bravely—his face brightened.

"I thought you would see it, Hester, when I put it clearly before you. You always do regard things in a sensible light, and it gives a man a feeling of reliance. Well, I shall go to the war office now," he continued, seizing his hat. "I will look in this evening again. No, I can't, by the way, I am dining out—but to-morrow morning."

He kissed her quickly, and then the door banged. The woman leant up against the chimneypiece, and laid her head on her hands. She worshiped him so; she had known and loved him all her life; she had worked and slaved for him; she knew all his weak, all his strong points—now he was going from her to a strange land—and—and—he would slip out of her life, perhaps.

The door opened and a girl entered the room.

"Hester—why, what's the matter?"

Hester lifted her head from the chimneypiece, her face was white and drawn, and her fine gray eyes had deep black lines round them. The other laid her hand on her shoulder.

"Frank is at the bottom of this, I suppose?" She said the name with a touch of scorn.

"He is going to India."

"O!" and the girl gave a long, low whistle. "Look here, Hester, I have never spoken before, because I did not want to hurt you, but it is just this—you are throwing away all your chance of happiness in life for Frank Thornton. Men of his type do not marry women like you or me; they depend on them, they accept their love, but they do not choose them for their wives; it is already five years since you were first engaged to him; be wise and break it off before he goes away—while you have the opportunity."

Hester laughed, but it was a laugh of intense pain.

"Do you remember, Madge, you told me a few days ago that you had never loved—if you had, you would know that what you ask of me is impossible. Frank is my world—the very breath of my life. I have worked for him, lived for him. I never have a thought in which he does not play some part—when one loves a man like that one cannot give him up—do you realize at all what it means?"

The younger woman was beating the floor with her foot; she was very clever, very modern, and she did not believe in love.

"No—I don't understand; I do not think I ever shall." Then she fumbled in the pocket of her coat. "If you can spare the time, Hester, I want you to run over this article before I send it in."

* * * * *

More than a year had passed since Frank Thornton sailed for India. Spring had come, with its snowdrops and crocuses and soft balmy days. In R—— street Hester sat in her tiny study watching and waiting for the mails. There was a great want of tenderness in his letters which she had been trying not to see. The door opened and Madge came in; she shook her head when she saw Hester's face.

"Unsatisfactory letter, I understand, my dear. Listen, Hester, we are going abroad for a month or so, and you must come, too—now, no excuses; you will be our guest, and the change will work wonders and blow away all the cobwebs."

Hester was very tired, so she said, "Yes."

A fortnight later she had left it all behind—the smoke, and the noise, and the work; she was reveling in continuous sunshine, in azure skies, in distant snow-tipped peaks, in a vast expanse of sea with rock-bound shores. The tired look left her eyes and the color came and staid in her cheek.

She met him dining at a friend's—the tall, strong man, with the keen gray eyes. He sat next her at dinner, and they discovered that they had many interests in common; they were both workers, they had both fought in the struggle for life, which is in itself a bond of union.

They met again the next day, and for many days after. Friendship with him was invigorating; his grasp of a subject was so clear, he saw points that other people often missed.

Then came the inevitable end of such friendships. It was during a walk that the man told her he loved her. He said it very simply, no passionate declaration of devotion, but she knew that this man loved as no other had ever done. She grew white, and her heart beat in great bounds against her side. She tried to stop him, but he went on quite calmly to the end. She leant up against a rock that jutted into the path—her lips trembled.

"I did not know that you really cared for me, otherwise I should have told you," and then she told him the history of her life, of Frank Thornton, whom she had loved so long.

He stood and faced her, drawing circles on the pathway with his stick. When she had finished speaking, he took a deep breath and straightened his shoulders.

"Are you sure that this man loves you as you love him?" he said slowly.

The color crept into her face, and she clasped her fingers tightly together.

"I pray God that he does."

The other man set his teeth and dug his stick into the ground. There was a pause for a few moments; presently he said quietly:

"I wish you to remember that if this man whom you love ever fails you I shall be there, waiting."

His voice broke at the end, and somehow a mist seemed to rise and shut out the stream, the railway, and the giant boulders from them both. When it had cleared they were walking side by side down the path by which they had come.

* * * * *

It was a typical Indian night, with a warm, moist atmosphere, and not a breath of air to stir the leaves of the palm trees that flourished in the compound. Two people passed out into the veranda to discover if such a thing as a breath of air were to be found. One was a woman in a soft white gown, the other a man in evening dress. The woman sank into a chair with a sigh, while her hands rested languidly on its arms. The man sat down beside her, and they remained without speaking for some moments. Then he drew nearer, and very gently laid his hand on hers.

"Dear, I think you must know that I care for you more than for anything on earth. I tried to tell you a week ago, but you wouldn't let me. I will tell you now that I love you with my whole heart and soul."

"But the woman in England. The woman who has loved you all her life?"

"I will write to-morrow and tell her," he whispered.

And the girl in the soft white gown murmured, "Yes."

* * * * *

It was a cruel, thoughtless letter. He loved and was going to marry another woman—she, the woman in England, would quite understand. She had always been much too clever for him, he could never live up to her ideals, but he would not like to lose the friendship of so many years, and he hoped that when he came to England he might bring his wife to see her.

Before dinner Madge came into her room, and Hester handed her a letter she had just written, which said:

"Do you remember telling me once if I ever wanted you, you would be 'there waiting?' I want you now. Will you come? Yours,

"HESTER MAINWARING."

"I am most awfully glad, Hester," was Madge's reply as she gave it her back.

Something in the tone of her voice struck Hester, but Madge had her back turned, so she never saw that her lips quivered.—Home Notes.

Common Speed in Walking.

Very few pedestrians walk four miles an hour; three miles is a very fair gait, and when one exceeds that he is beginning to walk fast. If my recollection serves the old common time in the army carried a man two and five-eighths miles an hour. The distances which the soldiers covers in an hour have now increased somewhat by slightly increasing the length of his steps, but my impression is that the common time remains under three miles an hour. Certainly three miles would be good, fair walking, and fully up to man's average speed.

Easily Explained.

Waggs—Why do they always have the walls of a saloon covered with pictures?

Jaggs—Oh, it's merely a matter of business.

Waggs—How's that?

Jaggs—They are usually so bad that they drive men to drink.

THE story of Cuba is a tragedy, a tragedy so black that the pages of history, not excepting those upon which is written the diabolical doings of the Spanish Inquisition, contain no counterpart. It is a narrative which had its beginning in the discovery of America; it was rooted in Spanish tyranny, transplanted into centuries of treachery and oppression, reared in internecine strife, and matured in this revolting war and its attendant horrors, which have wrested from Cuba the proud title, "Pearl of the Antilles," and earned for her the name of "Isle of Blood."

The revolution was organized by Jose Marti, a Cuban exile in this country and a man of genius and courage. He organized here what is called the Cuban Revolutionary Party, an association of clubs of Cuban political exiles, for the purpose of raising money to free their country.

Poor as were the majority of the few Cubans who lived in the United States before the beginning of the revolution, they listened to the eloquent appeals of Marti and gave him all they had on earth to liberate Cuba from Spain. Marti was appointed delegate of the party, and his faithful friend, Benjamin J. Guerra, was made treasurer. There was not much money then in the safes of the afterward famous Junta and their funds were soon exhausted by an unsuccessful attempt to start an expedition from the South. But Marti had obtained the co-operation of Gen. Maximo Gomez and Gen. Antonio Maceo, two veterans of the last war. He knew that the discontent against Spain was deep throughout the island. He had important connections with conspirators in all the provinces. He gave without hesitation the orders for the uprising and went to Santo Domingo to join Gen. Gomez and take, with him, the field.

At that grave and decisive moment the total funds of the patriots amounted to not more than $70,000. It is wonderful that with a sum, comparatively speaking, so paltry for so great a purpose, a war should have been raised which cost Spain up to February, 1898, besides the sacrifice of so many of her soldiers, $250,000,000 and caused to the United States a net loss in trade and business of $300,000,000.

On May 19, 1895, Marti was killed in the engagement at Dos Rios, but his work had already been done. He had landed on April 11 with Gen. Gomez at Sabana la Mar, on the southern coast of Cuba, after issuing at Monte Cristi a revolutionary manifesto, and had had time before his death to convoke the representatives of all the Cuban provinces to a general assembly to elect a provisional government and frame a constitution. If this was not done until later, in September of the same year, at the town of Jimaguayu, it was not the less true that from the first days of the revolution the desire of Marti, as of all the patriots, was to organize a republic with popular institutions.

Two months before Marti's death Gen. Antonio Maceo had landed at Duava, near Baracoa, Santiago de Cuba province. With a handful of men and a few rifles and cartridges, a small open boat brought him to Cuba from Jamaica. But his name and his presence were enough to make Spain tremble. He and his heroic brother, Jose Maceo, were surrounded by superior Spanish forces on the day of their landing. They broke through the Spanish lines and made their way into the country. In a few days, as soon as the news spread of their arrival, the province of Santiago de Cuba rose in arms and Antonio Maceo had around him more than 10,000 Cuban soldiers.

The revolution was saved. The few patriots who took up arms on Feb. 24 at Baire and Manzanillo had courageously resisted under Gen. Bartolome Maso, now Cuba's president, the attacks of the columns of the Spanish Gen. Lachambre, as well as the proposals of peace from the captain general of the island, Don Emilio Calleja. The envoys of the captain general told Maso that the revolution was a failure. The provinces of Pinar del Rio and Havana were entirely quiet. A few unimportant bands in Matanzas and Santa Clara had been dispersed or had surrendered. Puerto Principe was unanimously in favor of peace. But Maso, knowing well how to receive such reports, refused to yield. He had confidence in the landing of Maceo, Marti and Gomez. He knew the great moral effect that the presence of those leaders in the field was going to have on the Cuban people; and Spain knew it also. The news that Maceo was in Cuba reached Madrid shortly after the overthrow of the Sagasta cabinet. Canovas, then in power, resolved to fight the revolution with the first of the Spanish generals and with all the resources of the nation. Gen. Calleja was recalled and Gen. Martinez Campos was sent to Cuba with 25,000 soldiers.

Martinez Campos landed in Guantanama, Santiago de Cuba, on April 16, 1895. His first impression was pessimistic and the long chain of defeats inflicted upon his command until December of the same year proved how right he was in believing from the first day of his arrival that this war was to be more important than the previous one of 1868. He wasted a great deal of time in useless trips by sea to Havana and again to the East. Maceo was preparing in the meantime his men and Gomez was formulating the plan of the great invasion of the West in order to carry the revolution to all the provinces and establish in each one a regular body of the Cuban army.

July 13, 1895, is the memorable date of the battle of Peralejo. The war had been until then confined almost to the province of Santiago de Cuba, with some small bands of patriots roaming through Puerto Principe and keeping up only an unimportant guerrilla warfare. But Maceo had already obtained some notable triumphs, and Martinez Campos decided to carry reenforcements to the Spanish towns in the interior which were in great danger of attack by the insurgents. While Martinez Campos was on the way to Bayamo, Maceo offered him battle near Peralejo.

The engagement was a pitched battle, and the Cubans, not numbering 6,000, carried the day. Gen. Santocildes fell dead near Gen. Martinez Campos. The Spaniards lost all their ammunition and their horses. Completely routed, a body of them, availing themselves of the darkness of the evening, fled to Bayamo, carrying Martinez Campos on a stretcher borne by four soldiers. He was exhausted by fatigue and filled with despair. More than 300 Spanish soldiers were left dead on the field. With the splendid booty secured by him, Maceo completed the arming of his patriots.

From April to October Gomez successfully carried the war through Puerto Principe province and laid his plans for the invasion of the west. On Oct. 22 Maceo, having received orders from Gomez, who was appointed commander-in-chief of the army, in September, by the assembly of representatives, started for the east with 2,000 of his men. On Oct. 30 Gomez invaded Las Villas. Maceo joined him on Nov. 29 near a place called Los Guayos. From there they began their triumphant march. On Dec. 3 the Spanish Col. Segura was defeated by the insurgents at Iguara and had to leave his dead on the field, together with a great supply of arms and ammunition. On Dec. 15 the Spanish battalions of Canarias and Trevino were routed by Maceo at Mal Tiempo, after the most gallant charge with machetes of the Cuban cavalry, led by Maceo himself, that has ever been seen in the Cuban wars. On Dec. 21 the victory of El Desquite cleared the way for the invaders to the province of Matanzas. Martinez Campos then made a desperate effort to check the two Cuban leaders. Until that moment he had been recoiling before the invaders with his columns, hoping that they would stop. But he saw that each step of the patriots to the west was a decisive triumph for their cause. The enthusiasm of the revolution was growing day by day throughout the country. The Cuban ranks were filled by volunteers from all the cities and towns by which Gomez and Maceo passed. Martinez Campos rallied his almost dispersed men and presented battle at El Coliseo on Dec. 23.

The action was sharp and decisive. Martinez Campos behaved bravely, leading one of his wings in a charge against Gomez, but Maceo, falling on the Spanish, won the day for Cuba and compelled Martinez Campos to retire. The captain general hurriedly entered Havana, making preparations to defend the city, and he confessed his defeat to the astonished Spanish volunteers and residents of the capital.

Spain Sends Weyler.

On the night of Dec. 27 the captain general made that avowal. A few days later the rabid Spaniards of the city compelled him to tender his resignation to Madrid. They demanded from Canovas a captain general framed in the old iron cast of the Spanish conquerors, not to fight battles and risk his life on the field, but to exterminate the native population. In their belief, women, children, every one born in Cuba, should be held responsible for the situation. They did not like a soldier with a gallant career and personal courage. They wanted an executioner. Canovas satisfied them and appointed Don Valeriano Weyler y Nicolau to succeed Martinez Campos.

The question may be asked why the patriots, after so many victories, did not invest the city of Havana and end therewith the Spanish dominion. The answer is very clear. After the battle of Coliseo Gen. Gomez reviewed his troops and found that each soldier had only three cartridges. The Cubans in the United States were making vain efforts to send a big expedition to the patriots. But if the Spanish army was defeated in the fields of Cuba, Spanish diplomacy was triumphant at Washington. At Guira de Melena on Jan. 4, 1896, the patriots had to fight with their machetes to enter the province of Havana. For such a state of affairs Gen. Gomez considered his best plan to be to organize armies in all the provinces invaded, so far as his resources permitted him to do, and try to raise the war in Pinar del Rio province. At Garro Jan. 8 the patriots routed a Spanish column and entered Pinar del Rio. Gen. Gomez then withdrew to the east while Maceo proceeded to the west. On Jan. 17 he obtained another victory at the very gates of Pinar del Rio city and on Jan. 22 he took the town of Banes at the western extremity of the island, three months after his departure from Baragua in Santiago de Cuba. On Feb. 12 Maceo returned to Havana province. Gen. Weyler publicly declared Pinar del Rio pacified, and the gallant Cuban leader returned to that province on March 15.

CUBA'S GEOGRAPHICAL RELATION TO THE UNITED STATES.

Before this Weyler had already shown his sanguinary spirit and plans of murder. Prisoners of war and innocent persons unjustly charged with aiding the rebellion were shot every day in Havana. The most summary court martial preceded the executions as a mere formality. In other cases the victims were murdered in cold blood in their dungeons or thrown alive into the sea during the night at the entrance to the harbor to feed the sharks. The horrors of the Council of Blood under Alva look pale when compared to the crimes of Weyler. In the country his troops had orders to kill every non-combatant without regard to age. In the cities he appointed as inspectors of police the most infamous murderers and thieves from the Spanish penal colonies in Africa. In a short time more than 100,000 persons emigrated from Cuba panic-stricken.

But Weyler was not satisfied. He intended to destroy the country and to exterminate the natives. Seeing that the executions in the forts were too slow a method and that the destruction wrought by his columns was not enough to ruin the island, he conceived one of the most monstrous crimes ever committed against humanity. On Feb. 16, 1896, he issued his two famous decrees of concentration. By them every human being in the country districts was compelled to leave his home, after it had been destroyed by the Spanish columns, and go to one of the fortified towns under the vigilance of the Spanish soldiery. With the homes of the reconcentrados their cultivated lands were to be devastated and around the towns where they had to live not a piece of bread was to be given to them. In this manner, under pretext of a military operation, half a million people, most of them women and children, were condemned to die from hunger.

A SCENE AMONG THE STARVING RECONCENTRADOS.

Wholesale Slaughter.

From the date of those decrees until November, 1896, 300,000 people were murdered thus in Cuba. Since November, as a result of Weyler's sanguinary orders, the number has been increased to 400,000. What monster in history ever did so much against humanity and civilization? Nero, Caligula, Tamerlane, Torquemada, Alva, when compared with Weyler, appear mild and humane. A poltroon, besides being an assassin, he never offered battle to the Cubans or took the field to fight. In the time Spain sent 200,000 soldiers to Cuba. He kept them inactive guarding the trocha from Mariel to Majana in Pinar del Rio province or from Jucaro to Moron in Puerto Principe. At other times from his palace in Havana, following on a map the imaginary positions of his enemies, he ordered his columns to make combined movements that always resulted in defeats.

One instance of the stupidity and cowardice of Weyler occurred on May 1, 1896. He ordered one of his favorite combinations of columns against Maceo at a place called Cacarajicara in the province of Pinar del Rio. The result was that the forces of the Spanish Colonels Inclan and Gelabert were shattered by the Cuban leader, and the havoc made in the Spanish lines was so great that the Spanish soldiers, panic-stricken, threw themselves into the sea to escape the Cuban machete. Weyler, as in all other cases, accused his subordinates of not having obeyed his orders exactly.

On Dec. 7, 1896, Maceo, after having crossed Weyler's famous trocha and entered Havana province, was assassinated in an ambush near Punta Brava. The revolution lost in him a great patriot and a heroic soldier. But Weyler soon understood that the murder of Maceo was not the death of Cuba's cause. In March, 1896, Gen. Calixto Garcia landed in Santiago de Cuba. He soon replaced Maceo as a dashing fighter and a brilliant commander. At the same time Gomez in Santa Clara had won the important battle of Saratoga and controlled the whole province. The battle of Juan Criollo in February, 1897, was another of Gomez' important victories, and in Santiago de Cuba the latter part of the year was made conspicuous by the triumph of Gen. Garcia at Victoria de las Tunas.

Weyler was recalled in November, when, after the death of Canovas and the fall of the short-lived Azcarraga cabinet, Senor Sagasta was selected as prime minister by the queen regent. It is a well known fact that Weyler's recall was imposed upon Spain by this country.

Gen. Don Ramon Blanco, who was to change the sanguinary methods of warfare of his predecessor, entered Havana Nov. 29, 1897. Spain granted to Cuba an autonomist system, which has been declared a mockery by all impartial judges. The Cubans rejected it, and the new regime inaugurated in Havana on the first day of the year by Gen. Blanco was a complete failure. The patriots declared the acceptance of autonomy an act of treachery to their flag. They hanged as spies the Spanish agents sent to them to pose such a scheme. They rejected with scorn the offers of money made to them by Blanco. The death of the Cuban General Garranguren, near Havana, did not discourage the patriots in the least. They kept up the war as enthusiastically as ever, adopting as their motto "Independence or Death."

Effective Tip.

A hungry guest at a Chicago hotel who had sat at one of the tables unnoticed several minutes, called a waiter to him at last, and said:

"Yes, sah."

"You got his order, have you?"

"Yes, sah."

"Well, now, I'll give you a tip also which is this: Bring me exactly the same order, served in exactly the same style as his, and with the same promptness, or I'll report you. Do you get them, young fellow?"

EUROPE AND THE WAR

However averse we may be t ward any interference on the part of European nations in our war with Spain, we cannot overlook the fact that most of them have strong inducements to intervene. The war has raised the price of wheat, and that in turn has caused such distress among the poorer classes of the people of Europe that already bread riots have occurred in Italy and are threatened elsewhere.

We have been so much occupied in this country with the progress of our armies and navies that we have given but little attention to the economic situation on the other side of the Atlantic. The riots in Milan and other cities of Northern Italy have been passed over as if they were only ordinary street disturbances, whereas they were in fact of such magnitude and so portentous as to amount almost to the degree of a civil war. Indeed, they appear to have resulted in a greater loss of life than has been caused by the war with Spain up to this time.

Every European statesman is aware of the danger that comes when a dissatisfied populace are rendered desperate by a lack of work or by such rise in the price of food as to make wages inadequate to the needs of families. All of them are therefore eager to take whatever action promises to break the deadlock in wheat and restore, if not prosperity, at least endurable conditions among their people. A cessation of the war with Spain would undoubtedly have a tendency in that direction, and accordingly all of them would gladly do almost anything to hasten the return of peace.

In this condition of affairs their animosity may be directed toward the United States, but most of them have sagacity enough to see that they could not bring the war to a close by siding against us. The much talked of intervention, then, if it comes at all, is not likely to take a form that would be resented by our government. It is more likely to be a pressure applied to Spain to recognize the inevitable and seek for peace at once on whatever terms we chose to grant.—Call.

We now see where yellow journalism has land us. Only a little while ago there was a disposition made quite manifest to praise the yellow system because it was blatantly shouted, "it gives us the news; it exposes matters; it keeps officials on the jump and uncovers things." But we are now finding out that this uncovering, this Paul Prying and sensational reporting is as dangerous as the gun that shoots from the wrong end.

It is now asserted by official departments that some serious reverses with which we have met are due wholly to the intolerable conduct of yellowism. The government has been unable to make a move of any kind that these conscienceless sheets have not checkmated it by revealing its purposes and giving the enemy full notice of what to expect. So gross and unmannerly has the matter become that at last the Government has been compelled to forbid the giving of any information to newspapers, and to declare that if any paper offends again it shall be excluded from the army and navy lines, and its representatives will not be allowed to enter either or to go into Cuba.

Other stringent orders have issued controlling cable and telegraphic lines, and limiting the opportunities of reporters and correspondents. The greed for sensation, the insufferable, noisy and flatulent laboring to outdo in lying and exciting the public mind; the lust for greasy nickels and the complete subversion of truth, patriotism and decency to the mercenary ends of scarcet sales, and the vulgar ambition of horn blowing have brought us to the pass in which we now find ourselves.

They have any difficulty of this kind in countries where the press has sufficient regard for the nation that protects and shelters it, to conserve its ends in war by discreet silence where publication would be to the advantage of the enemy. We are impressed with the belief that before this war is over the Government, as a military measure, will have to adopt even more stringent regulations before the pernicious international dling of the yellow press is wholly stopped. The conductors of these sheets, who appear to think that the nation has entered upon war simply to afford them opportunity to carry on their practices with a high hand, must be taught that Government of the United States is maintained for the highest, greatest good of all the people, and not for the purpose of giving sensational journalism an opportunity to coin money at the expense of national honor and success.—Union.

The State of Ohio has decided to inaugurate a new experiment in the treatment of imbeciles. Hitherto these weak-minded unfortunates have been housed in great asylums, where under the constant care of trained attendants they have received elementary classroom instruction. While this system developed the intellectual resources of the imbecile, weak and wavering as they were, there was no opportunity to build up the physical energies. Gymnasium exercises failed to meet the requirements. The State Legislature has recently appropriated $150,000 for the purchase of a farm and the establishmdnt of an imbecile village in connection with it. Instead of a great asylum there will be a great number of cottages, each in charge of a competent attendant. It is proposed to develop the minds of the members of the colony by classsoom work and their bodies by outdoor exercise in practical farming. They will thus have the same mental stimulus as before and will also have the advantage of pure air, physical exercise and the healthful incentive of sustained work along practical lines. The result of the experiment will be watched with interest.

WAR NEWS.

May 20—The Spanish Cape Verde fleet has arrived at Santiago de Cuba without incident. Admiral Camara, of the Cadiz squadron is at Madrid receiving instructions relative to destination, which is expected will depend upon the requirements of war. The new Spanish minister of war is injecting great activity in the campaign, and it is said is negotiating with foreign diplomats to protect Spain against a combination of her enemies. The success of the Admiral in avoiding the American fleet and keeping them on the alert has excited great enthusiasm at Madrid, and causes the press to clamor for the prompt dispatch of the reserve fleet to the front. The Charleston is again ready for sea, and will sail tomorrow. A high official in Paris says there is certainly a feeling of sympathy for Spain in the higher circles of society. Some cranks have started a subscription for Spaniards. Havana's relief at the safe arrival of the fleet is great, as it was feared that the American ships which left the blockade had gone to intercept the Spanish fleet. It is now believed the Americans fled in order to avoid a reverse.

May 21—Auxiliary cruiser Montzerrat has arrived at Corruna, Spain last evening. She was given an ovation.

Secret service in Washington say we have surprises ahead. Censorship on press messages very strict.

Food is scarce in Havana. Schley's squadron is anchored six miles off Key West.

May 23—Three ships carrying 2,600 men will leave Frisco for Manila tomorrow.

London—Rise in Spanish securities. Said by St. Sames Gazette to be due to knowledge beforehand on the part of several leaders of a Franco-Spanish alliance.

Madrid—Fleet will maneuver in Sanish waters until destination is determined on.

Colonial government has decreed that all importations of food into Cuba be free of duty.

Washington—Naval experts believe Cerveras squadron rapidly exhausting coal, and cannot long elude our fleets.

Madrid—From discussion in Senate today the government is seriously contemplating recourse to privateers.

The Oregon is safe at Key West. Schley and Sampson will henceforth be allowed their own discretion in dealing with Spanish.

May 24. 8:35 a. m.—London—There are rumors prevailing here that the American squadron has destroyed the Spanish Cape Verde fleet.

LATER. 5:28 P. M.

New York—German consul at Manila threatened to land provisions from German ship under protection of German warships. Dewey informed them he would fire on them if they did and the attempt was abandoned.

Washington—Navy department has no news of engagement or arrival of the Oregon.

Madrid—Officially announced that Cervera's fleet is still at Santiago de Cuba. It is now said that the Manila expedition will be abandoned and that the Cadiz fleet will be sent to relieve Havana. 1000 soldiers left Barcelona for Cadiz yesterday.

San Francisco—Four companies of regulars, full regiment of Oregon volunteers and battery of California heavy artillery boarded the Australia this morning. Together with the Peking they will sail for Manila tomorrow.

Madrid—There are now nineteen American warships before Havana.

May 25—Secretary Long has received an official dispatch announcing arrival Oregon at Jupiter, Fla. Last night with Buffalo and Marietta. Long also says that while no official word has been received concerning the bottling up the Spanish fleet in Santiago harbor by Schley, he fully believes press reports to that effect.

President today issued a call for seventy-five thousand volunteers. Enlistment is open and not confined to national guard. Everything quiet in Manila but reported that insurgent leaders have offered their services to Spanish government. Transport fleet leaves Frisco this afternoon

May 26—Oregon arrived at Key West this morning, and is now at anchor. Left San Francisco March 19, coaled three times on trip and arrived with plenty of water and coal. She heard of Manila victory at Rio de Janiero. U. S. Gunboat Hornet came from blockade this morning and reported all quiet before Havana

Gibraltar—Reported that forty Krupp guns have been sent from Essen, Germany, to Cadiz. Passed custom houses as kitchen furniture.

London—Madrid dispatch says that a revolution would surely follow defeat of the Spanish fleet. Queen refuses to fly the country although urged to do so.

2,500 troops left Frisco for Manila yesterday.

Key West—Schley believed to be outside Santiago. Sampson known to be in Bahama channel.

The largest and most powerful vessel in the United States navy is the battleship Iowa, which has a displacement of 11,296 tons and is 360 feet in length. The next ships in size are the Massachusetts, Indiana and Oregon, each measuring 348 feet and having a displacement of 10,288 tons. The other first-rate battleships are the New York, Columbia, Minneapolis, Texas, Olympia and Puritan. There are sixteen vessels in the navy ranked as second rate and thirty-seven third rate. Since the present trouble with Spain arose this government has purchased eighty-one vessels, among them a number of yachts and tugs.

Some time ago, says an exchange, a young man sent a letter to a German lady which read: "That you may make no mistake, remember that I will wear a light pair of trousers and a dark cutaway coat. In my right hand I will carry a small cane, in my left hand a cigar. Yours ever, Adolph." The girl's father replied to the letter thus: "I vill be there. Dot you vill make no mistake I vill be dressed in my shirt sleeves. I vill vare in my right hand a club, in my left hand I vill vare a bisdol. You vill recognize me by der way I hits you on der hed mit dot club. Your frent, Heinrich Muller."

Call.—It was at Santiago de Cuba that the men of the Virginius were murdered years ago. In all human probability enough Spanish blood will be shed there soon to remind that nation that vengeance, while not always swift, is tolerably sure.

"To term the Phillipine contingent a "relief expedition" for Admiral Dewey is hardly a proper use of the term. Dewey does not need relief half so badly as do some of the people he has met.

"There are reasons for hoping Spain may not rush more troops to the Phillipines. Dewey has scant facilities for taking care of prisoners."

W. J. Bryan is to organize a third regiment of Nebraka volunteers and tender their services to the President as soon as mustered. Governor Holcomb last week issued him a commission as Colonel, with authority to proceed, and Mr. Bryan told the Associated Press correspondent that he would accept the commission.

THE LITTLE OLD SHOE.

It is only a tiny shoe
That she touches with tender care,
A cunning little bit of a thing
That a baby used to wear.
And she gently raises it to her lips
And lovingly holds it there.

It is worn and faded and old,
But it brings up the happy past.
She sadly sighs as she thinks of the joys
That were too sweet to last.

In fancy she sees a little child
As it gambols upon the floor.
An edifice creature with golden hair
Is cooing a baby song once more,
And a tear drops down on the tiny shoe
That the beautiful dream child wore.

"Ah, well," she sighs to herself,
"'Tis, alas, the will of the fates!
I used to be able to wear this shoe,
But now I take number eights."

ANIMALS AND MUSIC.

A Strange Experiment Made In a Zoological Garden.

A violinist was playing various airs before the cages of the animals. The bow, which had been passing backward and forward half drowsily, took up a gait that would have distanced one of the deer in the pen by the buffaloes' yard. Then there was a transformation scene in the home of the lioness as rapid and as complete as that of the time. The cubs went into ecstacies. They rolled about, jumped, fell over one another, raced over their mother's recumbent body, and danced unrebuked on her head. They ceased their tantrums only with the ceasing of the music.

Then they gathered at the front bars of the cage again and silently and pathetically pleaded for more. Their plea was successful, and in response to the delicate flattery conveyed by their manner the player gave the lullaby once more. They simply sat and listened to it as silently as they had at the first. The transition to the jig music was once more made speedily. The first note of the lively air had barely left the violin before its riotous contagion had once more caught the cubs. They rollicked and rolled about and stopped only when the professor, fearing to tire their little limbs, took his bow from his fiddle and told them they had danced enough for debutantes.

The hyena is an uncanny brute. His very appearance goes a great way toward bearing out charges of graveyard robbery brought against him. He has no music in his soul nor room for any. Sweet sounds are to him so antipodal to everything in his nature that they inspire him with nothing but fear, and the most abject fear at that. When Professor Baker tried to interest the two skulking hyenas in his performance on the violin, they began trembling visibly at the first note's utterance, and then as the music swelled they sought the farthermost side of their prison and tried their best to squeeze their ungainly bodies through the bars to escape the melody.—Philadelphia Times.

Dave Holland took a trip to Lone Pine last Tuesday to look after his sheep interests.

The photograph gallery has left and the tuneful phonograph is heard no more.

The social dance last Saturday evening was well attended and thoroughly enjoyed.

The school census for 1898 shows 999 children enrolled, an increase of twenty from last year.

Considerable complaint comes from various portions of the county regarding dead sheep in the streams.

Clarence Johnson of Versailles, Kentucky, is making a visit to his brother, Dave Johnson of Independence.

Arthur E. Sutherland arrived from Ballarat yesterday, having in charge Anton Sivoro, charged with insanity.

Frank Densmore on last Monday morning took formal possession of his position as receiver of the U. S. Land Office.

The judge's stand has been moved up from the old race track, and will be remodeled into a printing office for the INDEPENDENT.

Chas. V. Simpkins of Garfield, Washington, is in town, taking treatment for an aggravated case of lung trouble. Dr. Woodin has him in charge.

Anton Sivori, who who was found on the desert near Panamint in a crazed condition, was yesterday committed to the county hospital. His derangement is apparently only temporary, caused by exhaustion, and in a short time he will probably have fully recovered his mental balance.

A special train went to Keeler last Wednesday having on board Assistant Superintendent R. J. Laws, State Controller E. P. Colgan, Geo. T. Willis of Carson, R. H. Brewer of Woodland, Geo. L. Arnold and John C. Wray of Los Angeles, H. H. Taylor of San Francisco and J. G. Burke of San Rafael. The party came over to Independence on Thursday and spent a few hours.

Shortly after noon Saturday last two Indians became involved in a dispute in front of Mairs' stable, when one of them suddenly drew a knife and inflicted a nasty cut on his opponent's jaw. The murderous Piute was arrested and gave the name of Jim Reynolds, but his correct name is Julian Estrada. The Indian who was cut answers to the name of "Gypsey." Reynolds was tried before Justice Davidson last Tuesday and was given 60 days in the county bastile.

Lawson Newton and family and Orie Newton and family of Corona are on a visit to O. I Mairs. Mr. Mairs yesterday presented this office with a potato that was raised by the Messrs. Newton that would delight the heart of any son of the Emerald Isle. The tuber measures 19½ inches in circumference one way and 23 inches the other, and weighs about five pounds. This is at the rate of a little less than eleven to a bushel. Its surface is as smooth and bright as a dollar, and it looks good enough to eat. Mr. Mairs says it is from the bottom of the sack, too.

"Remember the Maine"

To the Pupils of Inyo County:—

The National Committee having in charge the erection of a national monument to the men who went down in the Maine, have decided to construct underneath the monument a special vault, in which it is desired to place the signatures of all the pupils of all the schools of the United States.

At the meeting of County Superintendents at Sacramento, April 27, it was unanimously resolved that every pupil in the State of California should be given an opportunity to place his name on this patriotic roll.

Now, boys and girls, as all the schools of our county have closed for the year, and many of your teachers have gone away, I must ask you to show your patriotism by taking this matter into your own hands. I will send to the Clerk of each district a blank roll for your names. Then I wish the older pupils to take charge of this roll and see that all the scholars of each school have a chance to sign it. If any pupil wishes to help build the monument he may contribute five or ten cents to the fund, but no more than that will be accepted. It is not your money that the committee wants, but your signatures. After securing these names as neatly as possible, please return the rolls to me, so that I may forward them all at an early date to the committee.

I feel satisfied, boys and girls, that you will gladly do this little patriotic service in honor of the brave men who went down in the battleship Maine.

Sincerely yours,
S. W. AUSTIN,
Superintendent of Schools.

An Ohio man has patented a new and ingenious church contribution box that is destined to be a great success in swelling the receipts. It has a bell attachment. When a shirt button or a penny is dropped in it fails to ring; a nickel makes it ring slightly; a quarter produces a respectable ring; a half dollar makes a good loud clatter, and a dollar brings out the fire department.

One Can Always Give Himself.

One of the pleasantest of day dreams is to imagine how charitable you would be if you had plenty of money. The role of a bountiful master or mistress is a delightful one, and it is easy to imagine how, if you had a command of a fortune, you would make people happy and with what grace you would receive their gratitude. Of course few persons can venture to indulge the hope that they will be rich, but while we are dreaming these dreams it is well enough to think whether we are showing ourselves charitable in the use of what is really within our command. Take, for instance, one's thoughts. It is natural enough to put a hard and bitter construction upon the actions of others. Possibly, from a superficial point of view, their conduct warrants it. But a thoroughly charitable person—one who would use money beneficently if he had it—will certainly make allowances for others and only reluctantly come to the severe judgment. It is a mistake also to suppose that money can do everything. There are a good many persons who would not if you were as rich as a Barnato take a penny from you. They do not want your money, even though they are not rich themselves, but they would prize considerateness, sympathy and fellowship. If we withhold these things that are surely within our power, probably we should not be so very generous if we had plenty of money.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Cheap Trick.

To manufacture a cheap kalsomine, stuck on the wall with glue, claiming it to be the "same thing," or "just as good," as the durable Alabastine, or to buy and sell such goods on such representations, would seem a cheap trick. Some resort to it. To be safe, buy Alabastine only in packages and properly labeled.

The Joke on the Joker.

A good story, of which Mr. John Kendrick Bangs, the humorist, is the hero, has leaked out. Some time ago Mr. Bangs received the following letter from a city in one of the Pacific states:

Mr. John K. Bangs:

DEAR SIR—I have been asked to respond to a toast at our board of trade's annual dinner next month, and I write to inquire what would be your lowest terms for preparing a good, rattling, funny speech for me to deliver on that occasion. A prompt reply will oblige. Yours very truly,

To which Mr. Bangs immediately sat down and penned the following reply:

DEAR SIR—I am in receipt of your esteemed favor of the —— inst., and in reply would say that my regular rate for after dinner speeches is $500 per speech. I have not as yet, however, opened up this line of goods in the west, and as I am anxious to secure custom in that part of the country I will offer you special terms—namely, $250 for such an address as you describe, the amount to be paid as soon as shipment is made. If the terms proposed are satisfactory, kindly let me know at once, but in that case I would request you not to mention the matter to Chauncey Depew or General Horace Porter, as I should not like them to know that I am cutting rates. Truly yours,

JOHN KENDRICK BANGS.

This letter was duly sent, and on the day when it reached its destination Mr. Bangs received the following telegram:

Your letter just received. If Chauncey Depew's speeches are written by you, then I don't want one.

The Mothers' Congress.

The national congress of mothers will hold its second convention in Washington the first week in May, and the prospects are that the attendance will be even larger than last year. The names of many notable men and women will appear upon the programme. The sessions will last for six days, and among those who will deliver addresses are Dr. Stanley Hall, Professor Charles Thurber, Dr. Minot J. Savage, Mrs. Mary L. Mumford, Miss Harriet Neil, Booker T. Washington, Dr. Martin Barr and Ralph Waldo Time.

Without blood circulating through your veins you could not live. Without pure blood you cannot be well. If you have salt rheum, scrofula sores, pimples, boils or any kind of humor, your blood is not pure. If you take Hood's Sarsaparilla it will make your blood pure and promptly relieve all these troubles.

"I was troubled with hives, which appeared in large white and red blotches all over my body. My skin was rough and I suffered with constant itching. I tried various remedies without benefit, and finally began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. The first bottle did me so much good, I continued its use until I had taken five or six bottles, and I have never been troubled with hives since that time."

CHICAGO CHAPERONS.

Society Editors Instruct Youths as to Their Uses.

The society editor was humming a line that ran something like this:

"Oh, the queer things we do and the queer things we say."

"What are some of them?" demanded the man who does a little of everything.

"Well," replied the society editor, "today a young man came in to get a society item in the paper. It was about a theater party or something of that sort, and he had it all nicely written out, and down at the bottom of the page was the statement that the party would be chaperoned by Miss Blank."

"Well?" said the man who does a little of everything, but who is nevertheless not posted on society matters.

"Well," explained the society editor, "of course there is no law, written or unwritten, that says a party of young people may not be chaperoned by an unmarried woman, although it is not usual, for she is supposed under such circumstances to be of mature age and considerable experience.

"'This Miss Blank is not a young lady,' I suggested, and he was angry in a minute.

"'Who says she isn't?' he demanded. Then he added, 'I happen to know that she is just 19 years old.'

"'She can't very well chaperon the party, then,' I said.

"'Who says she can't?' he demanded again. 'She's just as good as any of the swells on the Lake Shore drive, and don't you forget it.'

"I explained to him very carefully that a chaperon should be a matron or a woman of mature years, and he quieted down.

"'Well,' he said, 'of course we've got to have a chaperon so's to be in style. The girls are all set on doing the thing right and proper, and we boys have undertaken to see it through. Maybe Miss Jones would do for a chaperon. She's 22 years old.'

"'Hardly,' I replied. 'If you feel that you must have a chaperon, the thing for you to do is to invite some matron to accompany you.'

"'Well, I guess not,' he answered, with emphasis. 'Why, that would spoil half the fun, and besides we'd have to put up for her ticket. If one of the girls can't be the chaperon, you can just cross that part of it out.'"

Then the society editor again began to hum:

"Oh, the queer things we say and the queer things we do."—Chicago Post.

Friday His Lucky Day.

"I've quit her," said Gritly as he smoked a good night cigar with his chum. "It's all off. Henceforth it will be like the memory of a dream; what the novelists call a passing romance."

"But I thought you were engaged?"

"So we were. I had seven warm encounters with the old gentleman before I gained his consent. She wears my ring, and I'm paying for it on the installment plan."

"What's gone wrong, then?"

"It's her superstition. She's bright and cultured, but she's the most superstitious girl that ever came within my experience. I wouldn't believe it, you know; couldn't at first. I proposed to her on Friday. A fellow in love is lucky to know the year, to say nothing of the day of the week. Nothing must do but we break off so as to escape the bad luck. We happened to make this shift on the 13th, and I'll be blowed if we didn't have to break off again in order to kill down the hoodoo. Yes, sir, engaged three times and never had a quarrel. It breaks the record.

"We never started any place yet that she didn't forget something. Do you know that girl would always go to the end of a block before she would turn back? Did it every pop; all superstition. I raked up my whole pile to take her to the musical event of the season. Passing into the theater she stubbed her toe. That settled it. She must get right home to avoid a catastrophe. Had to hire a coupe and the driver carries my watch yet.

"I looked my record up and got word to her that I was born on Friday, in the dark of the moon, and with an unlucky star in the ascendant. She promptly called the engagement off, and that's what I was after."—Detroit Free Press.

Hindoo Cruelty.

The correspondent who sends the following to the Calcutta Asian states that his information came to him on unimpeachable authority. During a royal hunt in one of the Rajpoot states an exceptionally fine tiger was caught—netted, no doubt—and lured into a cage. His captors then proceeded to noose his feet and draw them through holes bored in the floor of the cage, and a blacksmith was directed to draw his claws. The tiger's legs having been secured by ropes, the royal sportsmen had a sliding door in the cage opened, and when the captive put his head out they shut the door down on his neck while the blacksmith, with mallet and chisel, broke off his teeth. Preparations were concluded by muzzling the poor brute with strong wire in some inhuman fashion. The tiger was then released, to be baited by dogs, and, despite his maimed condition, he killed several before the "sportsmen" wearied of the game and shot him.

If this story is true, and the information is said to have come from an eyewitness—and there is nothing impossible in the crippling part of the business—one would dearly like to take each of those Rajpoot royalties in turn and read him a lesson with a cutting whip.—London Sketch.

HERO OF THE MAINE.

"Bill" Anthony, Who Informed His Captain the Ship Was Sinking.

On the fateful evening of Feb. 15, when the United States cruiser Maine was lying peacefully at anchor in the harbor of Havana, William Anthony, a private of marines, was doing duty as sentry on the port deck of the warship. He passed up and down before the cabin of Capt. Sigsbee, whose orderly he was. The captain was inside writing a letter to his wife.

Suddenly there came that fearful explosion, whose echoes will linger long in the hearts of the American people. The great ship was lifted bodily out of the water for a moment. Then as she sank the decks were torn open and death and destruction were scattered all around. Anthony stood at his post, rifle in hand, during the trying ordeal. At the first explosion Capt. Sigsbee rushed out of his cabin, and as he did so he was struck in the cheek by a flying missile. He stumbled against Anthony. That brave marine, as steady as if he were on parade, saluted the captain and then made this simple speech, which has since made his name known from the Atlantic to the Pacific:

"Excuse me, sir, but I have to inform you that the ship is blown up and sinking."

The captain ordered Anthony to get out the boats and save his comrades. The brave fellow was one of the last to leave the doomed ship and left only when the water was flowing over the deck.

"Bill" Anthony, as the cool-headed marine is popularly known in the navy, has spent many years in Uncle Sam's service, as soldier and marine. He saw some hard service in the army, and has fought Indians in the West. Ten years ago he enlisted in the navy, and there he has since remained. Standing six feet two, built in proportion, and with handsome features, he is a soldier every inch of him and would long ago have been promoted but for one weakness—love of the bottle. While he never drank on duty, and has always been a model on board ship, his conduct when on land has kept him below the grade of a non-commissioned officer.

WILLIAM J. CALHOUN.

New Interstate Commerce Commissioner Was Once a Farm Hand.

William J. Calhoun, recently appointed Insterstate Commerce Commissioner, was one of the early McKinley men in Illinois. Mr. Calhoun is about 50 years of age and is a native of Pittsburg. Early in life he was left to shift for himself and as a lad he came into contact with the McKinley family, and especially with the President, when the latter himself was a rugged youth. At that time Mr. Calhoun was a farm hand in Ohio. Later in life, when the President returned from the wars, Mr. Calhoun knew him intimately as a young lawyer, and the two became friends. Then the currents of their lives diverged and Calhoun settled in Illinois, to follow the profession of law.

Successful Co-operative Colony.

A Tennessee community living as one big family has just established a college at New Economy, the head of each household putting in a certain sum for the purpose. The standard of value in the settlement is an hour's labor; in its home commerce it has no money and needs none—a certificate that labor has been performed takes its place. A pound of tea costs eleven hours' work; seventy hours pay for a pair of shoes; two and a half for a pound of crackers, and so on. Everybody works and all—men and women alike—receive the same wages. They have heretofore worked ten hours a day, but expect soon to reduce it to eight. They have a kindergarten and adequate educational machinery, music, languages and a limited technology being taught in addition to the regular branches. Numerous communities of the kind have been founded in this country, but only a few have lasted a decade. From present indications, however, this one is destined to enjoy a longer term of existence.

More Ornamental than Useful.

FINE EMBROIDERY.

A Beautiful Panel Screen and the Way It May Be Done In Crewels and Silk.

A species of embroidery which is called a novelty in France and is just now all the fashion appeared at the Decorative Art rooms here in New York a number of years ago, an especial exhibition of the work of Mrs. Holmes of Boston. It consisted of panels, squares and other shapes, each one being a realistic landscape done in crewels and silk, but having all the vigor of color of an oil painting. In the accompanying design for a screen the panels are worked in this way. The first panel is entitled "A Calm Evening." The foundation is a pale, dull blue. The houses and church are put in with a dark purple. The leaves of the vine are in dark green, with others of a lighter green, the moon and its reflection pale yellow, the lines of the clouds indigo blue, the bridge and the ground a dark brown, and the markings of the water in black. The middle panel is called "A Starry Night." Gold stars are embroidered on a deep blue ground, and the clouds are cut out of a rosy gray. The third panel is called "Dawn." The foundation is yellowish pink, the line of the clouds is in bright rose color, the land in the distance indigo blue, the vessels are in a deep rich brown, and the rocks in the foreground in dark green and black.—New York Tribune.

First Girls' School In China.

The pioneer school for girls in China has been started. The Shanghai papers of the 24th of December contain the plan of organization and a curious lot of regulations which have been framed for the government of this, the first institution for the education of women founded and managed by natives. It is, of course, dedicated to Confucius, and a tablet to his honor will be erected in the school for the girls to worship.

At the beginning only 40 girls, between the ages of 8 and 15, from the upper classes, are to be received, but if the experiment is a success the number will be enlarged as fast as circumstances will justify. There are to be two teachers—Miss An Ngae Teh and Miss Chih Mei Yu, both of whom have been educated in the United States. A board of 12 lady (Chinese) managers, or trustees, is to be elected by the votes of those who contribute to the maintenance of the school, and an advisory board of 12 gentlemen, but neither the latter nor any other men shall ever be admitted to the school. If they wish to consult with the teachers, they must arrange to meet them elsewhere. The tuition is $1 a month, with 12½ cents per month as fees to the servants, this including sleeping apartments, but meals for boarders are extra.

A Mississippi Woman.

Mrs. Robert Somerville of Greenville, president of the Mississippi W. S. A., is a lady highly respected in her section. Indeed, most of the southern state suffrage associations are thus fortunate in their presidents. The Greenville Times says: "Mrs. Somerville, the president of the Mississippi organization, is a woman of exceptional and carefully cultured intellectual strength, united to a personality and social prestige which peculiarly fit her for the responsible position she holds. She is the eldest daughter of the late William L. Nugent of Jackson and has inherited in the highest degree the mental gifts possessed by her distinguished father. The work of the association has made surprising progress in the south, notwithstanding the predictions that the conservatism of this section would oppose a formidable barrier to its advance."

Keeping Posted.

At least one morning in the week the intellectual smart set in Washington arises an hour earlier and is seen wending its way to the Wimodaughsis club, where behind closed doors Miss Janet Richards posts her fair hearers on all the topics of interest of the day—political, religious, social and literary—so that when they take their departure they are able to discuss intelligently with priest, layman or politician subjects of present interest. A large number of the official set are among her auditors. One busy woman said: "You do not know what a relief it is to us, for with all our social duties it would be impossible for us to keep posted on all the topics necessary for discussion in official life. We are also instructed in the literature of the day and learn what to criticise. How could we keep read up and have time for anything else?"

Spanish and French women of the higher class are usually expert swordswomen. They are taught to fence as carefully and accurately as their brothers, and there are numerous schools in the two countries where young women are taught not only to fence, but to handle the broadsword.

Mrs. Jefferson Davis.

The selection of New York as a place of residence by Mrs. Jefferson Davis is thus explained by a friend in the Macon Telegraph: "Mrs. Davis told me that the plantation at Beauvoir did not afford a living for herself and daughter, on account of freshets, floods, the low price of cotton, etc., and that it was necessary for her to work for a living. The best work suited to both of them is of a literary character, and when they began to look for purchasers of their productions they only found them in the north. They have made repeated efforts to dispose of their work to southern purchasers, but have found the demand very small for it, there being practically no market for high class literary work in the south, all of the big publishers and newspapers that are able to pay for it being in the north. Consequently it became necessary to move to one of the large cities, and they selected New York. There they find a ready market for all their productions, and the income thus derived, together with the small income from the Beauvoir plantation, affords them a comfortable living."

CONSOLATION AND COMFORT.

Who is it that does not wish to be out in the open air or alive in some field of sport, whether it be with the bat, rod or gun; whether we go coasting over the hills and vales on the wheel or sailing over rough waves or into serene coves, it is all sport, and the springing muscles seem to need it. It is bound to happen that some mishap will occur. Thus it is that we have sprains in abundance. Light sprains, sprains that cripple, sprains that give great pain, sprains that rob us of sleep, but sportsmen of all kinds have come to know that there is nothing better than the old, reliable St. Jacobs Oil. Have it with you for use, you may rely on its cure of the worst sprain and restoration to the comforts of life.

"Why Jingly is fairly ablaze with the fires of patriotism." Yes, his age exempts him from the draught."

A LONG LOOK AHEAD.

The politicians are even now beginning to weigh the possibilities involved in the next Presidential election. The papers are full of electioneering gossip, and venture predictions as to the future which are somewhat too self-confident. But it is safe to say that a systematic course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will renew health in the malarious, bilious, rheumatic, costive or nervous.

Tit For Tat.

The late Montagu Williams, in his "Leaves of a Life," relates how he was engaged with Sir Hardinge Giffard—now Lord Halsbury—in an important election petition at Shrewsbury. At their lodgings Mr. Williams began to smoke. Sir Hardinge protested. He said he "never smoked," and eventually his eminent junior had to put on a mackintosh and smoke his cigar in a snowstorm. Mr. Montagu Williams did not have to wait long for an opportunity to retaliate. Sir Hardinge carried his habit of punctuality to a height that was only equaled by his politeness. He would have breakfast ready to a moment, but would never commence without his junior. That morning Mr. Montagu Williams tarried so long over his toilet that he did not enter the breakfast room until three minutes before the hour at which the court sat. He writes:

"I found Giffard seated in an armchair before an enormous fire. The breakfast—grilled fish and other delicacies—was placed on the fender. The tea had not yet been brewed. My leader looked in a rage. He must only have been acting, however, for in all my life I never saw him seriously out of temper. I knew he declared, just as well as he did, what his rules were. I knew that he had been waiting breakfast for me. It was my duty to be down in time and make the tea, and in consequence of my laziness he would have to go to court without any breakfast at all. 'But,' I casually remarked, 'I never eat breakfast. I don't care about it.' 'Well,' he rejoined, 'you are, I think, the most selfish fellow I ever came across.' 'Oh, dear, no,' I said, 'you forget the smoking yesterday. You don't smoke. I don't see the difference.' He burst out laughing, and we proceeded to court. That night I remained by the fire when the meal was over and smoked my cigar."—St. James Gazette.

Mary Lyon.

One bright Holyoke woman, who is among the oldest of the Mount Holyoke graduates, is thoroughly in sympathy with all the advancing steps made there. She says that Mary Lyon was in her day most progressive and in advance of the times, and if she were living today she would not be only in sympathy with all the new work, but would be even more advanced. She even has a private theory of her own that Mary Lyon set the old seminary building on fire to make way for the new college requirements.—Holyoke Transcript.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION.

"Will you kindly allow me," writes MISS MARY E. SAIDT, of Jobstown, N. J., to Mrs. Pinkham, "the pleasure of expressing my gratitude for the wonderful relief I have experienced by taking your Compound? I suffered for a long time with nervous prostration and general debility, caused by falling of the womb. It seemed as though my back would never stop aching. I could not sleep. I had dull headaches. I was weary all the time, and life was a burden to me. I sought the seashore for relief, but all in vain. On my return I resolved to give your medicine a trial. I took two bottles and was cured. I can cheerfully state, if more ladies would only give your medicine a fair trial they would bless the day they saw the advertisement, and there would be happier homes. I mean to do all I can for you in the future. I have you alone to thank for my recovery, for which I am very grateful."

ALABASTINE

ALABASTINE IS WHAT?

Alabastine is a durable and natural coating for walls and ceilings entirely different from all kalsomine preparations, made ready for use in white or twelve beautiful tints by the simple addition of water (latest make being adapted to mix with cold water), put up in dry powder form, in 5 pound packages, with full directions on every package.

WHAT ARE KALSOMINES?

Kalsomines are cheap temporary preparations manufactured from chalks, clay, whiting, etc., are stuck on the wall with decaying animal glue. Alabastine is a cement, which goes through a process of setting, hardens with age, can be re-coated and re-decorated from time to time without having to wash and scrape off its old coats before renewing.

MUCH SICKNESS

Particularly throat and lung difficulties, wrongly attributed to other causes, is the result of unsanitary conditions of walls and ceilings. Think of having bedrooms covered with layers of molding flour paste to feed vermin, with paper to hide them and to absorb the moisture of respiration, and an animal glue culture ground on its face for disease germs; this having strong colors added like a colored shirt, to hide the dirt; then think of "the nasty practice" of repeating this papering, without removing the old, and a number of times, at that, as many do. Then think of a room coated with pure, porous, permanent Alabastine, which is retinted with but little trouble or expense, and is purifying and sweet-smelling and fills cracks. Wall paper free would be dearer than Alabastine if cost of removing paper is considered.

TO DEALERS.

Do not buy a law suit or an injunction with cheap kalsomines, imitations of Alabastine. Dealers assume the risk of a suit for damages by selling an infringement. Alabastine Company own the right, covered by letters patent, to make and sell wall coating adapted to be mixed with cold water. Alabastine Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.

THE EVE OF HER WEDDING.

Hush! Let me hide my happiness,
A little while let grief hold sway,
And sweetness blend with bitterness,
Before I give myself away.

Soon, soon, must pass for evermore
The scenes of old; new paths I choose;
Oh, let me count my treasures o'er,
That, winning love's delights, I lose.

Dear home! How all its nooks and trees
Recall my childhood's joys and tears,
Mixed with immortal memories
Of twenty tranquil, transient years.

Familiar sounds of birds and bees
On summer evenings fair and still,
Set to the music of the breeze,
Or twilight tinkling of the rill.

O babbling brook, O darling glade,
Old church beside thine ancient yew,
Where oft my childish feet have strayed,
I bid you all a last adieu!

Dear simple souls, so stanch and true,
In cottage homes, o'er hill and dell,
A distant home is mine; to you
And yours I bid a last farewell!

A last farewell! Though all appear
Part of my very being's whole,
Linked with my whole life's sojourn here,
Knit to each fiber of my soul.

Linked with the golden dreams of youth,
And all its gay and gladsome things,
When childhood's innocence and truth
Lent to each buoyant day its wings.

My father smiles, and chides in vain
The tears my mother's love lets fall;
My sister's heart is wrung with pain—
Good-by! I soon must leave you all!

This little hour I give to grief,
With tender thoughts mine eyes are wet;
I almost seem to find relief
In reminiscences and regret!

One little hour! My woman's eyes
With waning childhood's dews are dim.
Away! Love calls! I must arise,
And hasten forth and follow him.

A SWIM FOR LIFE.

"SAY, stranger, there's something wrong yonder, ain't there?"

Thus spoke a rough-looking miner, on the outskirts of the camp, to a Mexican who was walking hastily past. The stranger understood but imperfectly the remark addressed to him, but replied, "Horses stole," and proceeded on his way, his long spurs jingling at every step.

The miner looked after him anxiously, and when he had disappeared down the hill, turned toward the saloon, muttering something about horse thieves and hanging, and strolled, or, as he would have himself said, "loafed" into the bar, where an excited assembly was gathered.

"Wa'all, they're gone clean away," cried the owner of the missing animals; "and my hosses nor donkeys don't stray by nature. There's bin some thieves around, you bet!"

"Like enough; but who's the man? Howsomever, if we ketch him, gentlemen, we'll shoot him fair."

"Give him a trial and rope him—that's the cure," said the owner. "And now tew business. My treat, gentlemen. Drinks round, and then I'll follow the tracks a bit, and let you know."

Such an offer was not to be slighted. The "drinks" having been fully appreciated by all present, at the expense of their health and brains, the owner of the missing beasts departed to follow the trail, which led toward the canyon up the river.

Ogden Smith, or "Soft" Smith, as he was not unusually called, had that very morning taken his horses to water down stream, and left them in a safe place pending their disposal. Ogden had been unfortunate in his prospecting. He was neither quick-witted nor quick-tempered, though ready enough with his six-shooter when circumstances seemed to warrant its use. But for this trait, "Soft" Smith would have been stamped with a strong variation of the term "idiot."

He followed the tracks mechanically, and after about half a mile, finding they still led up toward the hills, he returned; and as he strode back, breathing vengeance against his spoilers, he noticed human footprints on the farther side of the trail—heavy boot and spur marks. He felt inclined to track these again, but knowing the trail would lead to the river, then flooded with melting snows, he decided to return to the camp, and enlist the vigilants in his cause.

It has never been correctly ascertained why horse-stealing was then, and may be still, regarded as a worse crime than the taking of human life; but that this was the case in the West is undoubted. Many a rough digger was permitted to add to the notches already cut in the pistol-butt, but a horse thief was hunted down and executed summarily.

Notwithstanding a gathering storm, the men in the saloon, as soon as they heard Ogden Smith's report, determined to do vengeance on the criminal. The sufferer, meantime, met with much sympathy, and "dust" (gold dust, which passed for currency) was freely shaken into Ogden's hat in the bar-room. The discussion as to who the thief might be was waxing warm, when a voice cried:

"Reckon some Mexican's had a hand in this game."

This suggestion was at once adopted, and Bill, the miner, said:

"Aye, then I can show him. I saw him on the hill above this morning. Did ye notice any tracks?"

"I did," replied Smith, eagerly. "Large boots, and spur marks, too. That's the man!"

"We'll go for him. Who knows his place?"

Several present did, and one man added:

"He's a mighty quick shot, you may depend."

"We're more of us than him," was the answer of the leader. "He can't fix us all. Now, gentlemen, we must proceed reg'lar. 'Panel a jury, if you please; but there is no use in wasting time."

The jury was quickly chosen, and in order to avoid unnecessary delay horses were brought out, and the whole party rode through the driving rain and tempest to the Mexican's hut.

The door was burst open, and before the surprised occupant could use his weapon he was seized and bound, and thrown helpless on the floor. Before he was disabled, however, he managed to seize and retain a small knife, which he thrust into his sleeve.

To his questions he got but scant replies. The jury were ushered into a small shed, and told to deliberate upon their verdict, after a few questions had been put to the criminal, who protested his innocence.

One bystander, more humane than the rest, volunteered to act as prisoner's advocate, and addressed the jury as a matter of form, for he knew the stranger's doom was sealed.

After a pause the jury again retired, and in a few minutes the self-appointed judge, knocking at the door, asked for the verdict. To the astonishment of the bystanders, the answer was, "Not Guilty!"

A cry of joy escaped the Mexican; an exclamation of disappointment was vented by Ogden Smith. But the judge drew his revolver, and, beckoning to the committee, replied, calmly:

"Gentlemen, you'll have to do better than that. Try again; and this time attend to the evidence."

He handled his pistol menacingly as he spoke, and the jury retired again.

They were not long left undisturbed, for time was passing, the tempest was increasing in severity, and the committee had some distance to ride that night. In five minutes the judge again called them, and this time the obedient twelve gave the verdict "Guilty!"

"Quite correct," said the judge; "I approve. It's a verdict. Carry out the sentence, yew," he added to two of his associates. "And now, gentlemen, I think we've done our duty; the hosses wait. Hev ye anything to say?" he inquired of the criminal.

The poor man pleaded earnestly for mercy, and protested his innocence wildly, but it was useless. The majority of the party then left the hut, and the two men, placing their unhappy prisoner astride a mule, unbound him, except for a turn of the rope on his left wrist, and walked beside him to the place of execution. There his outer clothing was taken from him, and his boots—those fatal witnesses—laid aside. He was then fastened to a tree. The place of execution was well chosen. It was a low point jutting out into the river, just above the rapids. The current was running swiftly, swollen by the melting snows and the tremendous rain, which was still descending in torrents. From this point the river descended rapidly. Higher up, but then obscured by the thickly falling rain and mist, was a high ridge, which projected across the river, and formed a sort of bowl-like enclosure, in the center of which was (and is) a small wooded island. Below this spot the river divides. It becomes narrower, and passing on the right side over a small rocky breakwater, or natural barrier, it takes a tremendous leap sheer one hundred feet over the rock, spreading out from the base for many feet in its descent. On the left side of the island the stream has worn away the rock to a great extent, and on that side the water hurries down a rapid at a steep angle, and at the bottom meets deep water, which drives in a swift current over to the right shore, to a strip of beach on low ground—a watering station for animals.

The men charged with the execution had well chosen the place. The prisoner stood with hands clasped as one of his guardians was making preparations, and the other stood ready to fire should the prisoner attempt to escape. One was adjusting the cord upon a neighboring tree, underneath which the mule had been already led, when an exclamation from him made the other guardian turn his head. The quick-eyed Mexican seized his opportunity. With a swift sweep of his right hand he severed with the concealed knife the rope at his wrist, and with a desperate backward spring he threw himself into the eddying, boiling river.

The heavy splash was the first intimation that the other men had of the Mexican's escape; and, with revolver ready, one waited till the swimmer should reappear. He rose, and struck out boldly for the opposite shore. The man raised the pistol, when his companion stayed his arm.

"Give him a chance, Bob," he said. "You or me may want a good turn some day; and, besides, I don't b'lieve he lifted them animals. Soft Smith's an idjit."

"Well, mebbe yer right," replied the other, as he returned his pistol. "Poor chap!" he added, with a touch of feeling to which he had long been a stranger. "Poor chap! the fall will save us the job, anyhow."

"He's gone!" replied the other. "He can't git over, eh?"

"You bet!" exclaimed his companion. "He's right enough, I do declare; he'll git out now!"

Meantime the unfortunate fugitive was struggling vigorously to gain the center of the stream. He was swimming strongly, hand over hand, and every now and then he cast a glance at the ridge of rocks that fringed the rapid leading to the fall of a sheer hundred feet. Could he clear this, he might be saved. He was making good way, but ever being drawn nearer and nearer by the resistless current to his destruction. The men on shore watched his progress with feverish anxiety. Another yard or two and he would gain the rocky ledge which ended the fall, and where the less dangerous rapids began. Would he last?

The men clasped hands in their strong excitement, and by a simultaneous impulse cheered the swimmer on. The poor wretch heard it. It gave him courage. One minute more and he would be clear; with renewed energy he strove, and with a despairing effort clutched the rock. His legs swung for a second into the milky mass of water above the cataract. Could he bear the strain? A cheer from shore; a mighty effort—he swung himself over, and with a long, sweeping stroke dashed down the rapids and disappeared.

The men turned away, breathing more freely, and returned as hastily as possible to camp to report. The storm still continued; the river had run up the creek, and it was nightfall ere, wet to the skin, and chilled to the bones, they gained the saloon. Here all was confusion; twenty tongues, speaking at once, and all condemning "Soft Smith." The "judge" was present, and as the two men entered he said, "I'm kinder sorry we hanged that Mexican. We've done him an injury, boys, I'm afeard."

"Save trouble in the end, mebbe," said another. But the judge shook his head.

"What's the matter?" inquired the late comers.

"Why, Soft Smith's a fool. He's found his beasts safe at home, where they went o' themselves, having broke halter. The tracks was the Mexican's tracks, but only to his own location. We've done that man a wrong, and I'm ready to apologize; I can't say fairer. Here's his health!"

A voice from the doorway replied, "I drink to that!" And as all eyes were turned in the direction of the sound, a ragged, half-naked form, the limbs bruised and bleeding from deep scratches, walked up to the bar. Terror sat upon every countenance. The visitor was the Mexican.

"Didn't ye—didn't ye hang him?" gasped the sturdy but supersitious judge to his deputies.

"Guess not," replied one of the pair addressed. "He slipped into the river and swam across the Catract Rapid."

"Thunder! but I'm glad. Here's my hat, boys; fill in your dust now, and let him have it."

No second bidding was needed. Very soon the heap of gold dust had reached a goodly pile, to which Soft Smith was a most liberal contributor.

Ogden Smith was considerably laughed at, but the Mexican was regarded as a hero, and prospered. The camp in time was broken up, but there are many still alive who remember that swim for life across the Small Snake River.—True Flag.

ATTACKED BY AN ELEPHANT.

Explorer Cavendish's Thrilling Escape from Death in Africa.

H. S. H. Cavendish gave an interesting account of his recent trip to Africa before the Royal Geographical Society. Among the incidents he related was the following account of a fight with a wounded elephant, in which he narrowly escaped death:

"I tried to dodge him, but he was too quick for me, and as I neared the thin mimosa bush I saw him just over me with his trunk in the air, so I threw myself to the left on my face and kept still, thinking that the elephant might go on. He, however, stopped immediately and, spinning around, knelt down beside me, with his head right over me, and took a drive at me with his tusks, which I luckily avoided by rolling in closer under his chest. He then pushed me under him with his trunk and tried to pound me with his knees, but, as luck would have it, I was just out of his reach. I kept dodging his legs as they came down. This continued, my boys said, for half an hour, but he was very much occupied watching my gunbearers, who were shooting and shouting from some distance off. At one moment he lay on me and I expected every moment to hear the bones crack, but suddenly his weight was lifted off me and I pretended I was dead, and, not wishing to see the coup de grace coming, closed my eyes and remained quite still. The boys told me afterward that he got up and backed off my body, and knocked his leg against a log of wood lying close behind. Mistaking the log for me, he vented his rage upon it. He must have been badly wounded. After a time I heard the boys coming closer, and, waiting till they were fairly near, in case the elephant might not have gone far, I looked carefully round and saw him standing some 170 yards off. I got on my legs as fast as my bruises would let me and staggered toward my pony. The boys, on seeing me get up, were dumbfounded, and my groom, who was a great, hulking fellow, wanted to carry me, thinking I must have some bones broken; but, although my left leg was seriously bruised and my scalp damaged, I was in other respects unhurt."—London News.

An Unique Game.

For a simple amusement try the telegraph game. Provide as many telegraph blanks as there are guests. They will give them for the asking at any telegraph office. Select the initial letter of ten words; for instance, T, H, B, A, E, E, I, W, S, G. Hand each guest a telegraph blank, and have him or her write thereon a message to you, using these letters for the beginning of each of the ten words. Collect the telegrams and read aloud. If letters not commonly used in making words, like Z, X, Y, etc., be selected, the greater ingenuity is required to write the telegram. For instance, using the letters above for an illustration, one could write:

Starting Point, March 1, 1898, 10 p. m.
Mrs. J. G. Blank:
This has been an enjoyable evening. I will say good-night.
MARY THOMAS.

Of course, each person has the same letters, and the idea is to note the diversity of the sentences.—Woman's Home Companion.

SOUTHERN BLOODHOUNDS.

They Are the Descendants of the Fierce Man-Eating Cuban Dog.

The first Cuban bloodhounds landed upon this continent were imported 200 years ago by Spanish planters of Louisiana, then Spanish territory, writes H. S. Canfield in the Chicago Times-Herald. We all know what the dons were about 1700. Negroes were cheaper then, and if a slave gave trouble it did not much matter that the bloodhound's hold upon his throat was broken only by the tearing of the flesh and tendons. Many times in those days the fugitive negro did not live after his capture. If he succeeded in gaining a tree, his olive-skinned masters shot him out as they would a squirrel. If on the ground when caught the dogs killed him, sometimes before the arrival of the horsemen who had ridden hard to be in at the death.

The Cuban hound was a valuable dog and he was well treated. In some of the old court records of Louisiana are bills of sale of him. In instances the price ran as high as $800 a pair. The breed spread all through the South, although I have never heard of the dogs being used as man hunters in the upper tier of Southern States. I doubt that one has ever been laid upon the trail of a negro in Virginia, North Carolina or Maryland.

As a matter of course the planters of this century were careful to protect their slaves as far as possible from attacks by the animals. This was generally easy. The runaway slave invariably made for the swamp at the back of the plantation. It contained many streams and lagoons, which aided him in throwing the dogs off the scent. If the worst came to the worst he could always climb a tree. I have no doubt that the ancient anecdote of the coon which remarked to the man with the gun, "Don't shoot, mister; I'm going to come down," had its origin in some runaway "hand" perched in a cypress and gazing down at his irate master, but preserving always the negro's sense of humor. Indeed, the story is loved and venerated in every "quarters" south of Mason and Dixon's line, and is always good for a laugh. The planter's care in this matter was dictated more by policy than humanity. It did not pay to have a $1,000 negro chewed up by a $50 dog.

The bloodhound is now used only in the pursuit of criminals. Every southern penitentiary has a brace or more of them. They are not infrequently a part of the sheriff's outfit. The breed is not always pure, but the dogs serve their purpose. Their keenness of scent is one of the most remarkable things in nature, though it is of value principally in the more thinly-settled region. It seems incredible that the mere temporary pressure of a man's boot or shoe upon the ground should leave a traceable scent for twenty-four hours, providing that there has been no rain, but there is no doubt that it does. Sometimes in the South a murderer breaks jail. Until the universal introduction of chilled steel cages this was not a difficult matter. Dogs are telegraphed for at a distance probably of 150 miles. They arrive a day after the escape. They are led in leash to the point where the criminal is supposed to have made his exit and uncoupled. They take up the scent instantly and follow it rapidly. The man must have crossed much water or confused his trail with the hurrying footsteps of dozens of others to throw them off. Always supposing that twenty-four hours is the extreme limit of "law" allowed the fugitive, the bloodhounds are the best means of effecting his capture. Having far to travel, they do not bay. They have no breath to waste.

CHANCES OF MARRIAGE.

A Diagram Which Shows the Result of Statistical Research.

This interesting diagram almost explains itself. It shows the chances of marriage of spinsters and widows and whom they are most likely to marry. It is claimed by statisticians that spinsters from 15 to 44 have best chance with bachelors and after that should direct their attention to widowers. The diagram shows the result of statistical research and is authentic. With widows up to the age of 39 their best chance is with bachelors, and after that the widowers should receive their devotion.

TO THAW THE GROUND.

Here's an Apparatus that Will Prove a Boon to Klondike.

To thaw frozen ground and facilitate the working of shafts and tunnels therein an apparatus to direct and retain the heat of a furnace upon the face of an excavation, while also rendering access practicable to such face, is shown in the accompanying illustration, and has been patented by William E. Harris, of Chicago. The cone-shaped firebox of the furnace is formed by a coil of pipe covered by a layer of clay inside the shell, there being a suitable outlet at the top for the escape of the smoke and gases, and through which the upper end of the coil extends, to connect with a blower, by which air is forced through the pipe to be heated by the burning fuel, says the Scientific American. The lower end of the coil is extended through a box or conduit, where it is surrounded by sand or other non-conducting material to the ground to be thawed, where it connects with a sleeve held on a shield set against the ground at the end of the tunnel. The shield consists of a hollow frame, with central hollow door, there being apertures in the walls of the frame and door, allowing the heated air to pass directly in contact with the frozen ground against which the shield is placed. A jack holds the shield in position as the thawing proceeds, the door being opened from time to time to remove the ground, and the shield being moved forward accordingly, the pipe connecting with the coil being lengthened as the work progresses.

HARRIS THAWING APPARATUS.

Drink Man Needs.

An average man requires fifty-nine ounces of food per diem. He needs thirty-seven ounces of water for drinking, and in breathing he absorbs thirty ounces of oxygen. He eats as much water as he drinks, so much of that fluid being contained in various foods. In order to supply fuel for running the body machine and make up for waste tissue he ought to swallow daily the equivalent of twenty ounces of bread, three ounces of potatoes, one ounce of butter and one quart of water. The body is mostly water. The body of a man weighing 154 pounds contains ninety-six pounds, or forty-six quarts, of water.

ABUSING AN EDUCATION.

The Neglect of Self-Culture Is Ruinous Wastefulness of Advantages.

In a thoughtful paper on "A Waste of Education," in the Woman's Home Companion, Brand Bunner Huddleston speaks of the tendency of women to permit their talents to rust out:

"Mental culture may be the most costly or the most valuable gift of parents to their children just as they care for it after they get it. It is certain that few would equally neglect a material property of like monetary cost as they often do their educations. This, too, when money is the very shortest tape-line by which a mental gift may be measured. Perhaps it is due in part to the mistaken idea that when we have quitted the school-room we carry with us a stationary fund of knowledge that will, or ought to be, sufficient for our future. * * *

"Look at the piles of hard dollars and the illimitable hours of time spent every year in the study and practice of music alone; except for the good they are to teachers and to the makers of musical instruments, the half might as well be wiped out of existence at one clean sweep. A decent little eternity might be made out of the time. And this continues to exist and repeat itself generation after generation in the very face of the fact that music is an incomparable addition to home life, and on that account, if for no more lofty or selfish reason, ought to be perfected and never neglected by women.

"How many of your women friends will undertake to entertain even the family circle with a creditable performance? Usually their pianos stand idle from the period immediately succeeding their marriage until there are daughters old enough to be put at lessons; then the old folly will be repeated. What folly? Not the placing of children to study music or any other accomplishment that is for their good or that the purse will permit. Let them have all the advantages within reach, but also teach them appreciation; the folly consists in fostering through example, and by a tacit acceptance of the existing state of things, the idea that it can be other than a sinful waste of time to acquire a good thing and then neglect it. No one has any business to learn a thing that is not worth remembering. It is foolish from a merely utilitarian point of view. Thus it may not be possible or desirable for every mother to teach her own children, though some count it a sweet privilege to do so, yet it pays them to keep thoroughly posted, if only to judge of the quality of work being done by the teacher, and to supply that home co-operation which is so needful to the conscientious student and the teacher."

Enforced the Rule.

Among the ironclad sleeping car rules long ago adopted, and strictly adhered to, by the late George M. Pullman, was the absolute prohibition of card playing of any kind in his cars on the Sabbath day. Mr. Pullman took the ground, from the very start, that it would be an insult to a large part of the intelligent traveling public, which does not indulge in or indorse card playing on Sunday, to permit the few who draw no such lines to play on his cars in the presence of the many who would not sanction it on that day. All his sleeping car conductors, porters and other employes were given positive instructions to prohibit such pastime on Sunday, from morning until midnight. And as far as known the rule was always strictly lived up to. Another positive rule of Mr. Pullman was one refusing admittance to a Pullman car of any person known to be under the influence of intoxicating liquors when about to board a car. A case of this kind was thoroughly tested some years ago on a road in Iowa. A prominent official of another road had been on a pleasure trip and was returning home. He had been with some congenial companions and was the worse for the night's outing. He desired to take a midnight train for home, and several of his friends escorted him to the train and proceeded with the official to the sleeper. The porter promptly met the party at the door with "That gentleman can't come in this car." In vain was it pointed out that he was an official and his Pullman pass was exhibited, but all to no avail. "Makes no difference, gentlemen, if it was Mr. Pullman himself—no intoxicated man can occupy this car. It is against the rules." And the intoxicated official sat up all night in a day coach.—Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin.

Titles in Job Lots.

Heretofore American girls have found it a comparatively simple matter to buy titles, but the American men have been compelled to remain plain, unadorned citizens, without handles to their names. All this is to be changed if a bill which the Italian government proposes to submit to parliament becomes a law. According to the provisions of this bill any one desiring to become a prince may secure that title by planking down $8,000. Five thousand dollars will purchase the title of marquis, $4,000 the title of count, while titles of baron will be sold in job lots at $1,000 each.

Here is an opportunity for that class of Americans who pine for the mark of nobility. Perhaps, however, if they wait a little longer other European governments in straitened circumstances will enter into competition with Italy and titles will be sold on bargain counters at big department stores.—Troy (N. Y.) Times.

No Stones in Manitoba.

In Manitoba you can turn a furrow many miles long and not encounter a stone as large as your fist. The earth, for a distance down from three to five feet, is a rich, black loam, made by centuries and centuries of decaying vegetation.

THE PHILLIPINES

No valid reason has yet been advanced to show why the United States should relinquish the Phillipine Islands after we reach the point where we intend to dictate absolute terms to Spain.

On the other hand there are many arguments why we should keep the islands and among these are a few that at present indicate our inability to "let go" even if we are inclined to do so. If we hold the Phillipines for indemnity ransom, Spain, being bankrupt, will procure the money from some nation favorable to her interests, giving the islands as security for the mortgage. If France, for instance, should offer to advance the money, Great Britain and Germany would object, and as Great Britain is more than anxious to be our friend, we should probably pay heed to her objection; if Germany should make an effort to pay Spain's debt on this basis, Great Britain would still object, and her protest would be emphasized by that of France, Russia and Japan. Similar allied protest would ensue if Russia or Japan offered to relieve Spain of her burden.

The contingency that Great Britain would attempt to secure the islands is remote, owing to a vast expansion of interests in other parts of the world, and particularly in Africa. Great Britain has all that she can conveniently handle in the way of colonial dependencies, and unless some power inimical to her interests reaches out to control the commerce and political integrity of Maylasia she will not strive for further possessions in that quarter of the globe; it is not likely that she would make very serious objection to an arrangement between this country and Japan for the disposition of our conquest in the Far East.

There is a steadily growing sentiment in the United States favorable to our retention of the Phillipines and the establishment of a colonial policy that shall render the completion of the Nicaragua canal under American direction and control additionally profitable to our commercial interests. It has been an ever-recurring regret of our people that we have been unable to restore our mercantile marine to the supremacy it held previous to the Civil War, and many economists observe in the opportunity thus given the only tangible maritime and commercial resource that has offered during forty years.

The colonization of the Phillippines presents no more difficulties than many we have successfully overcome in colonizing this continent. If it shall be necessary to subjugate the hybrid races that inhabit the islands we are as well prepared for the work as we were to perform the same office for the Indians of the West. Out of the army we are sending to invade the Phillipines will probably be formed the nucleus of the American colony, and the success of these will gradually draw others of the same race and disposition to the Islands. With a better system of government and better methods of compelling a rich and productive soil to yield its best fruits, the Phillipines will eventually give ample returns for whatever we may be forced to expend at the beginning.—Post.

An informal meeting was held in Bishop on May 26, 1898, at which were present representatives of the Democratic, People's and the Silver Republican parties. The purpose of the meeting was to take preliminary steps toward the fusion of the parties aforesaid in Inyo county during the coming political campaign, on the issue of the free and unlimited coinage of silver. Robert O'Neal was elected chairman and F. C. Scott was elected secretary. After some discussion the following committee was appointed on resolutions: J. R. Eldred, S. E. Vermilyea and F. C. Scott.

The following is the report of the committee, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved—That it is the sense of all present that during the coming political campaign all citizens having the best interests of our country at heart, and believing that said interests will be most completely subserved by an immediate restoration of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, and believing that all efforts should be directed to the accomplishment of this purpose, and that the end will best be attained by the fusion of the Democratic, People's and Silver Republican parties, be it therefore further resolved.

That the Central Committees of the respective parties be requested to appoint from their number delegates as follows, towit:

Seven from the Democratic Central Committee, three from the People's Party Central Committee, and a delegation of four at large from the Silver Republican party; said committees to meet at Big Pine at one o'clock p.m., on June 11, 1898, to arrange for the fusion of the parties, to name a time for the primaries and to name a time and place for the holding of the County Conventions.

Resolved, that a copy of these resalutions be sent to the chairman and secretary of the Central Committees of the Democratic and People's parties.

Secretary.

WAR NEWS.

June 1—American squadron, augmented by the Porter and New Orleans, approached the entrance to Santiago harbor at 12:30, the Iowa leading. Inside the entrance could be seen a Spanish warship. As the American fleet drew near the New Orleans steamed ahead of the Iowa. Texas and Massachusetts. One fort opened fire on her, and she replied. Other ships directed their fire at the battery of Punta Gordo within the harbor and to a westward position occupied by Spanish warship. The latter replied to the fire and immediately became the target for all American ships engaged. She retired behind a projecting headland and was not seen again during the battle. The fleet then directed their fire at Socopa, Punta Gorda and Morro forts for two hours, doing tremendous damage to the defenses of the harbor. The masonry at Socopa and Morro were battered almost into dust. Spanish artillerymen and infantry could be plainly seen flying to the hills for safety.

The New Orleans is thought to be seriously damaged. The Spanish warships behind the projecting headlands continued to fire projectiles without range or direction. The number killed and wounded on the Spanish side must have been enormous, as shells hit the batteries squarely time and again, and amid flying masonry and dismantled forts the forms of men could be seen. Damage to American fleet unknown, but no one was killed.

June 3—Spanish ambassador at London insists that the only important Spanish warship at Santiago is the Christobal Colon.

Kingston, Jamaica—Schley will be reinforced by the Oregon and New York immediately.

Key West—Tug Leyden put three Spanish gunboats flying yesterday by firing two shots. The Spanish thought the Leyden was supported by warships and put back into the harbor. The Spanish are filling up Cardenas harbor with old hulks and rubbish.

Chattanooga — Four regiments left today for Tampa.

Navy Department knows nothing officially of engagement.

MODERN YANKEE DOODLE

By W. F. Mathack.

Dewey has great honors now;
With shot and shell like rain
He sent their vessels to their doom,
Those ships of treacherous Spain.

Yankee Dewey'll keep it up,
Dewey is a dandy,
He'll make the Spanish Dons submit
Whenever it comes handy.

Dewey's fleet ne'er lost a man;
And now have seen the stain
Of blood, 'twas shed for those who sank
—The ones who manned the Maine.
Yankee Dewey'll, etc.

Dewey's fleet surprised the Dons
And changed their silly notion.
He'll make them think he is their match
On land as well as ocean.
Yankee Dewey'll, etc.

We've read of Sampson and his strength
Long past in days of old;
And Spanish Dons will soon find out
Our Sampson's just as bold.

Sampson he would like to meet
The Spaniards while their bandy
For a fight, and he'll be there
Whenever they come handy.

The Sampson whom we read about
And the Lion he had slain
Could find a match in one we have Who'll avenge the helpless Maine.
Sampson, etc.

With officers both brave and sure,
Who man this longing fleet,
Awaiting with anxiety
These cruel Dons to meet.
Sampson, etc.

There's Schley who wants to meet them, too,
With thoughts of ones 'twere slain,
And sailors bold who want revenge
For their comrades of the Maine.

And if perchance the dons are found,
They'll find that Schley's a dandy.
And all he wants is just to get
The Spanish where they're handy.

For Cuba's freedom and the Maine,
These gallant warrior tars,
Stand boldly ready to defend,
Beneath the stripes and stars.
And if perchance, etc.

The squadrons waiting day and night
To have a scrap with Spain,
And when they do then Spain will pay
For blowing up the Maine.
And if perchance, etc.

The Spanish they are making fun
Of dudes and dandies too.
It won't be long until they know,
What a yankee dude'll do.

A Yankee dude will hit them hard—
They'll find that he's a dandy.
If he isn't, just like other folks
They'll find him just as handy.

News reaches here of an appalling accident which occurred on Mono Lake last Sunday. From Arthur Walters of Bridgeport we learn the following particulars: W. P. Nay, the Supervisor for that district owned a naptha launch which had been used there for a number of months. Sunday the men at Mr. Nay's place concluded to try it to see how it would run in rough weather. A party of six got in, consisting of the following: W. P. Nay, Frank Schalten of Big Pine, who has been working for Nay; Frank Montrose, of Lundy; J. E. Bean, who was a nominee for clerk of Mono county at the last election; John Matthews, a well known resident of the Lundy and Copper Mountain neighborhoods; and John O'Malley. The launch got out a mile or so from shore when it was capsized, and all on board were drowned. Mrs. Nay was watching the boat through a spy-glass from shore when the accident occured. At last accounts none of the bodies had been recovered. The terrible accident produced a deep impression here, where several of the men are well known. Frank Schalten, the youngest of the lot party, was raised at Big Pine, where his stepfather and his mother, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Halverson, and his brothers and sister reside. Mrs. J. M. Horton of Bishop is also a sister of the unfortunate boy. Most of the Monoite lost were men of prominence in their communities.—Inyo Register, May 31.

A SUMMER TOBOGGAN.

An Easy Way to Make a Jolly Good Slide Without Snow or Ice.

Although spring is well on its way and grass has taken the place of snow and ice, there is still fun for the boys and girls who are fond of coasting.

It is a very simple matter to make a summer toboggan. Take a long, stout plank or board eight inches wide and place one end of it on the top of a high fence or platform, allowing the other end to rest on the ground. At proper intervals under it place stout supports to keep it firm and steady. Then take an inch board a foot square and nail cleats on the outer edges in such a way that when it is laid on this long board the cleats will slip over the edges of it. Rub the top of the long board thoroughly with soap. Place the short board or slide at the top of the long board, sit down on the slide, let go all hold and go flying to the ground.

There is great sport in this little toboggan.

More ambitious boys can build from the top of a shed or from a tall stone wall, placing a number of planks end to end, bracing them securely and thus make a very much longer and more exciting slide than a one plank slide. Try it.—Chicago Record.

FINEST PARK IN THE WORLD.

What John Burroughs and Others Say of the Rock Creek Reservation.

In his entertaining book "Wake Robin," and in the chapter entitled "Spring at the Capital" (pages 165-166), John Burroughs says: "Outside of the city limits the great point of interest to the rambler and lover of nature is the Rock creek region. Rock creek is a large, rough, rapid stream which has its source in the interior of Maryland and flows into the Potomac between Washington and Georgetown. Its course for five or six miles out of Washington is marked by great diversity of scenery. Flowing in a deep valley, which now and then becomes a wild gorge with overhanging rocks and high, precipitous headlands, for the most part wooded—here reposing in long, dark reaches, there sweeping and hurrying around a certain bend or over a rocky bed; receiving at short intervals small runs and spring rivulets, which open up vistas and outlooks to the right and left of the most charming description—Rock creek has an abundance of all the elements that make up not only pleasing but wild and rugged scenery. There is perhaps not another city in the Union that has on its very threshold so much natural beauty and grandeur, such as men seek for in remote forests and mountains. A few touches of art would convert this whole region, extending from Georgetown to what is known as Crystal springs, not more than two miles from the present state department, into a park unequaled by anything in the world. There are passages between these two points as wild and savage and apparently as remote from civilization as anything one meets with in the mountain sources of the Hudson or the Delaware."—"Life and Light."

Miss Nettie Irwin, accompanied by her cousin, Miss Grace Loomis of San Luis Obispo, arrived at Independence yesterday morning. Miss Nettie has been attending school at El Paso, Texas for several years, and is home for the summer vacation.

Mr. M. F. Showalter and Miss Margaret A. Bell were married at the residence of the bride at Camp Independence yesterday morning, the Rev. F. H. Nicholas officiating. Only members of the family and a few intimate friends were present. The young couple left for their future home in Big Pine in the afternoon. The bride and groom were the recipients of a number of valuable presents.

Frank Densmore last Monday received an advertising circular from a firm of attorneys in Holland. It was evidently written by some one who possessed an unusually deep knowledge of the English language. It reads as follows:

"The undersigned, taking charge of the treatment of lawsuits and procuring inquiries in all places of the world, kindly put your attention on his office, established since 1855 and for judicial matters assisted by a lawyer and attorney.

Lawsuits being committed to my care, no caution required, before lawful persecution is beginning, and costs for every matter as cheap as possibly can."

FROM SWAMPER

BIG PINE, June 1, 1898.

The celebration of Memorial Day on May 30 at Bishop was a veritable red letter day. Thanks to the liberal patronage by the public of the benefit ball some months since, Gen. John A. Logan Post was reasonably "heeled" in the matter of funds for the celebration.

Promptly at one o'clock p.m. the procession, headed by the remnant of the old boys of the blue and gray, started for the cemetery to decorate the graves of the comrades who have been mustered out. The first division was composed of the drum corps, mounted police, G.A.R. Post, Daughters of Veterans, Sons of Veterans. This division was led by Sheriff A. M. Givens, who bewitched all with his magnificent horsemanship.

The second division, consisting of civic societies, school boys marching, school floats, President of the Day, orator and poet, choir, citizens in carriages, was led by J. H. Stoughtenborough, Marshal of the Day. The ceremonies at the graves of the departed comrades were quite impressive. The squad firing was fairly managed. The simple evolutions of the command were nicely done, and the old boys—like cold potatoes—were all right when warmed up.

The march to Munzinger's grove from the cemetery was made without calling into requisition the ambulance corps.

The Union vets south of Independence were represented by Comrade J. J. Stewart, and the boys in gray by Capt Hunter of George's Creek. Comrade Densmore of Independence was in evidence representing the G. A. R. post of the capital.

Comrades Danielson and Shoemaker represented the Big Pine contingent of Gen. John A. Logan Post, while R. W. [illegible] was [illegible] the last [illegible] notwithstanding his legs [illegible] from the Danielson battle [illegible] decorations [illegible] the Post drill [illegible] himself.

From the reading of orders from National Headquarters by Adjt. Woodworth to the benediction and collection for the proposed Lincoln monument everything was a success. The good will of your town was further illustrated by the presence of County Clerk D. J. Hession and Ben H. Yandell.

The concourse of people at the grove has seldom been excelled in point of numbers and enthusiasm.

The vocal music features of the occasion were excellent, and the reading by Comrade Green of the Sons of Veterans was a literary hit.

The flag drill by a dozen Bishop girls was excellent and was heartily appreciated and applauded, and the poem by Mrs. M. E. Stevens would not be out of place among the gems of the period.

The oration of Hon. S. E. Vermilyea was even better than that gentleman's effort on last Memorial Day, which is the highest compliment the Grand Army boys can find for it. From start to finish suggestions were offered calculated to make one appreciate our national dignity and honor.

On the conclusion of the exercises at the grove, the boys marched to the Post room and disbanded with the conviction that the Post, from Commander A. O. Collins to the "sawed-off sojer" in the firing squad, had tried hard to acquit themselves nobly, and a surething conviction that memorial day had been properly celebrated according to plans and specifications.

Our hamlet is saddened at the dispatch from Mono lake announcing the drowning of Messrs. Nay, Bean, Matthews, Montrose, O'Malley, and Frank Schalten of this place. The men were out on the treacherous inland sea, when a sudden gale capsized the frail bark to which they had trusted their safety, and in a moment the unfortunate victims were submerged by the rolling waves. Joe and Con Schalten started up yesterday, hoping to recover the corpse of their brother.

The contract for erecting the new school building for the Big Pine district has been let to Mr. Frank Smith of this place.

Assessor Chalfant is making the tax payers of the hamlet a brief call.

IT WILL STAND BY YOU.

Active, strong men, full of vigor and nervous energy, find in vigorous exercise the relaxation which they most need. They find also the best tonic for building up the system in open air exercise, which they freely enjoy, but there may happen at any time an accident to limb or frame whereby the flesh is badly bruised and perchance the face disfigured. This reminds us that there is one thing which in our sports we ought always to have about us, and that is St. Jacobs Oil, the promptest and best cure for bruises that is known to sportsmen, athletes and seekers of out-door pleasures. Have it handy and it will stand by you for a good cure.

Too Joyful.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says that a woman with her colored maid was recently traveling on a train. When the train started, the girl appeared to be in a fever of excitement. The conductor, the plush seats of the car, the sights from the window—everything was of absorbing interest. To the surprise of her mistress, Sallie, when food was offered her, refused to eat. An hour or two went by, and a sandwich was again offered to her, but she still refused. "What is the matter, Sallie?" asked her mistress. "Are you sick?" The girl rolled up her eyes ecstatically. "Oh, no, missus," she answered, "I ain't sick; but I can't eat when I'm trabbeling! It's too joyful like!"

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

The twentieth century will begin on Jan. 1st, 1901, and end with 2000. People did not begin to reckon time from A. D. 1, but waited until about the 550th year of the Christian era. People who begin to take the great health restorative, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, immediately after the first outbreak of dyspepsia, malaria, rheumatism, constipation, nervousness or kidney trouble will date their cure immediately from then.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

A Lake That Never Gives Up Its Dead.

"The Great Lakes" is the subject of an article in St. Nicholas. The author, W. S. Harwood, says of Lake Superior:

Another very interesting and very sad thing about this lake is that it never gives up its dead. Whoever encounters terrible disaster—happily infrequent in the tourist season—and goes down in the angry, beautiful blue waters, never comes up again. From those earliest days when the daring French voyageurs in their trim birch bark canoes skirted the picturesque shores of this noble but relentless lake down to this present moment those who have met their deaths in mid-Superior still lie at the stone paved bottom. It may be that so very cold is the water some of their bodies may have been preserved through the centuries. Sometimes not far from the shore the bodies of people who have been wrecked from fishing smacks or from pleasure boats overtaken by a cruel squall have been recovered, but only after the most heroic efforts with dragnet or by the diver. Once on a trip down the lakes I met a clergyman who, as we passed a point of land some miles before entering the narrowing of the lake at the Soo, pointed out the place where the ill fated Algoma went down on the reef some eight years ago, and as he looked he said slowly:

"I was at the funeral of one man who went down with her, and the only reason his body is not at the bottom today with the other 38 that were lost is because it was caught in the timbers of the vessel and could not sink."

Curled Horsehair For Market.

South America furnishes the greatest amount and best quality of curled horsehair, used for filling mattresses and stuffing furniture. On the wide pampas many thousands of horses are bred especially for the hair of their manes and tails. These between the round ups, which sometimes do not occur in three or four seasons, grow to great length, but owing to the lack of care and the state of the "camps," as the open country is called, the hair is usually tangled in what seems an inextricable mass. All over the camps grow many kinds of burs and thistles, and the animals as they graze or roll themselves about become covered with them. Their coats are naturally rough, the hair growing in an uneven, shaggy way. Stuck all over with burs and with mane and tail matted into nearly unwieldy masses, the poor creatures present a comical appearance. After they are shorn they seem to delight in the freedom of cropped necks and short tails.

The hair when cut off is freed from dirt and roughness of all kinds and wound into ropes, by which means it is made curly. It sells for 38 cents or 48 cents a pound. The longest strands are kept separated and used for horsehair furniture, cloths, etc.—New York Tribune.

The English Postoffice In 1677.

The postmasters were free from all public offices, from liability to quarter soldiers, and they received gazettes free of postage, "wherewith they advantage themselves in their common trade of selling drink, and they have their single letters free to London."

The rates of postage in 1677 were comparatively low. A single letter—i. e., a letter consisting of one sheet of paper only—could be sent for any distance up to 80 miles for twopence, and and beyond 80 miles for threepence. A letter weighing an ounce cost eightpence for 80 miles and a shilling beyond.

The mails were dispatched from London about midnight on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays and were due to arrive in London early on Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings. They were carried on horseback at the rate of five miles an hour, and they were liable to a detention of not more than half an hour at each postoffice (stage) on the road. England was divided into six runnings, or roads—viz, west, Bristol, Chester; north, Yarmouth and Kent, starting from Plymouth, Bristol, Chester, Edinburgh, Yarmouth and Dover respectively.—Notes and Queries.

All on Account of the Deacon.

"There's another war on between Closer and Pinchem."

"No? What's the matter this time?"

"Of course you know they hate each other. Been rivals in business and society for years. Long ago both wanted to marry the same girl, and neither got her. Each blames the other for that. Mention Closer to Pinchem and he wants to fight. Mention Pinchem to Closer and he'll swear in the richest vocabulary a profane man ever accumulated.

"Deacon Worthy was the occasion of the most recent rupture. He was raising money for some good purpose and went to Closer, who headed the list with $300 under a positive agreement that $200 of the amount was to be immediately handed back to him. When the deacon went to Pinchem, there were red splotches on the moon. He denounced Closer as a miser and a shark. The idea of his having subscribed but $300 to such a cause was disgraceful. Pinchem put down $500 and generously told the deacon to call on him if more were needed.

"When Closer saw the list again, he was tickled into a coughing fit and had word conveyed to Pinchem of his agreement with the deacon. They thought for a time that they'd have to put Pinchem in a straitjacket. The names he called Closer would keep a stenographer busy for a week. They reached Closer, and now there is to be a slander suit. Each has vowed to whip the other on sight, and it is better than a circus to see how they dodge each other in their daily walks. The deacon only smiles while he deplores the fact that any bad feeling was created."—Detroit Free Press.

"How long did you have to wait?"

"Fully five minutes."

Unprofitable.

Judge—Is it true, my man, that you quit the gang and reformed?

Prisoner—It's a solemn fact, yer Honor. Dey give me de job of pickin' women's pockets an' I couldn't line more'n one or two a month. I had ter look fur somethin' else ter do.—Detroit Free Press.

His Interest.

"Are you taking much interest in the Spanish-Cuban war?" inquired the European statesman.

"I should say I am!" replied the capitalist; "compound interest."—Washington Star.

Found Out.

Visitor (in insane asylum)—How long have you been inside?

Inmate—Ever since the people on the outside found out that I knew they were crazy.

The Difference.

Customer—What is the difference between those two hats?

Clerk—About the only difference is in the price. One is marked a dollar higher than the other.

Customer—So I see—a marked difference.

Quite a Difference.

Shorty—How far is it to the postoffice?

"About twenty minutes' walk."

"For you or for me."—New York Press.

A Streak of Luck.

Block—I had great luck at the races today.

Morgan—Picked a winner, eh?

Block—No; but when I reached the track I found I'd left all my money at home in my other trousers.

Morgan—That's your idea of luck, is it?

Block—Yes; and the best part of it was I didn't know a soul there and couldn't borrow a cent.

His Assurance.

Old Billyuns—What assurance have you to offer that you really love my daughter?

Anxious William—Why, I have promised to come and live with your family as a member of it for her sake. I wouldn't do that for mere money, 'pon my word.

Keeping It.

Miss Truegood—Are you observing Lent?

Mrs. Flickerson—Yes; I've had horrible luck. I haven't won a prize at a card party since it began.

Undecorated.

Miss Williston—How is it, colonel, that you have no medal? All the other officers in your regiment have lots of them.

Col. Copeton—Well, you see, I don't belong to any bicycle clubs and never made a century run in my life.

Righteous Indignation.

Mrs. Josh Perkins (on a visit)—I will take this——

Clerk—Cash!

Mrs. Perkins—See here, young feller, you needn't shout at me like that. Can't ye give me time to take out my pocketbook?—New York Journal.

A Modern Miracle.

Mrs. Churchleigh—Our new minister possesses the most wonderful persuasive powers I ever knew a man to possess.

Mrs. Homer—Indeed! In what way has it been demonstrated?

Mrs. Churchleigh—Why, he has only been with us three weeks and has succeeded in converting every member of the choir.

The Real Reason.

"I have just found out why artists and poets wear their hair long."

"Why is it?"

"They can't get it cut for nothing."

Not Very Encouraging.

Mother—Well, professor, do you think you will be able to make a musician of my daughter?

Professor—Alas! madam, I fear not.

Mother—Why do you say that, professor?

Professor—Three score and ten is man's alloted number of years, and I am now 55 years old. The time is too short, madam.

He Had Been There.

"Were you ever caught in a sudden squall?" asked a passenger of the steamboat captain.

"Well, I rather guess so!" replied the captain. "I'm the father of three pairs of twins!"

She Was an Understudy.

Smith—So your wife has gone on a three weeks' visit.

Jones—Yes.

Smith—Don't you miss the directing hand of the household department?

Jones—Not at all. Her mother lives with us, and she didn't go on a visit.

At the Opera.

She—You don't understand German, do you, Mr. Binks?

Little Binks—No—er—not much.

She—I wondered at you applauding so vigorously when the principal actor said he was too indisposed to continue.—Judy.

A Reasonable Hope.

"Yes," said Mr. Gillipins, "I think my son Daniel has a bright future ahead of him."

"How's that?"

"He's just got the agency for one of the best kinds of stove polish I ever saw."

Just His Luck.

"I never saw such a chronic kicker as Jenkins is."

"What's his latest grievance?"

"He found a $5 bill this morning and is grumbling because a man to whom he owed $3.75 saw him pick it up."

She Couldn't Guess What It Was.

Mrs. Maundsley—Do your daughter and her husband live happily together?

Mrs. Oldham—Alas, I'm afraid not. My daughter says they do, but every time I go to visit them there seems to be something present to mar the serenity of their lives.

Drawing Comparisons.

Charley—My papa is the kindest man in the world, I bet. He says he'd give every dollar he's got to make me happy.

Willie—My papa's better'n that. He never blows about the things he done when he was a boy.

They Get it Honestly.

"Why is it that women always lay so much more stress than men do upon the value of a pedigree?"

"They inherit it from Eve, I guess."

"From Eve? I don't see what she had to boast of in that line."

"It wasn't much, but she wasn't made out of clay, while Adam was, and I'll bet she never got through reminding him of her superior origin."

The Remedy.

She—Are there not moments in your life when you are not satisfied—when there is something lacking?

He—Yes, indeed!

She—At such times I always take refuge in music. And what do you do?

He—I advertise!—Heitere Welt.

First One a Record.

Jack—What an original girl Mabel Decker is!

Fred—I never noticed it.

Jack—I proposed to her last night, and she didn't say that she had hoped we might always be just good friends.

Too Dangerous.

"Why is it that Davidson never goes out with the boys any more?"

"He has developed a habit of talking in his sleep about things that he does in his waking hours."

How It Was.

Browne—Smith must lead a double life. He says he gives that man money for policy's sake.

Towne—Yes; that man is Smith's insurance agent.—New York Evening Journal.

It Was Rather Suggestive.

Jack—I thought you were engaged to Miss DeRibbons?

Tom—So I was; but it's off now.

Jack—What was the trouble; did she break the engagement?

Tom—No; I did. I happened to be in the store where she is employed the other day and heard her call for "cash."

Good Advice to Young Authors.

It is possible to give good advice without intending to do it. Some time ago an inspiring writer in New Zealand wrote to Mr. Rudyard Kipling for advice which might enable him to succeed in the occupation he had chosen. In due time he received the following note from Mr. Kipling:

"No man's advice is of the least benefit in our business (and I am a very busy man). Keep on trying till you either fail or succeed."

Mr. Kipling could hardly have said more if he had written the man a letter to cover a ream of paper.

The young author who is ambitious of literary success, and who has it in him to succeed, will not be discouraged by repeated failures; but will learn something from every failure, and persevere until he finds appreciation.

If he never finds such appreciation the proof is pretty positive that he does not possess the qualifications for success; and he has hardly wasted his time, since beyond question he enjoyed the work, or he would not have done it.

Going Around the World.

A traveler can now go around the world in fifty days.

Suede Corsets.

The newest corset is made of suede. For a good many centuries women have been strapping their bodies up in a combination of steel, whalebone and heavy cotton goods or silk, but it remained for the woman of today to demand a leather corset. It does not stretch or get out of shape easily, even when worn by a very stout woman. But it is an intensely hot garment and gives the figure a stiff, set look. No thin woman would dream of wearing one of the suede corsets, though they come in beautiful soft shades of tan, blue, red and green and are handsomely embellished with lace, ribbon and embroidery.

Artist Ida Burgess.

Miss Ida Burgess is winning success in Chicago as a house decorator, principally as a mural painter. Her first important work was the decoration of the reception room in the Illinois state building at the World's fair. The next year she was asked to decorate the Lunt library at Evanston, which is perhaps her best work. Miss Burgess is a Chicago woman and a pupil of Oliver Merson, the great decorative painter in Paris. During her second year abroad one of her pictures was exhibited in the Paris salon.

Mrs. Jennie Jamison.

Mrs. Jennie Jamison of Neenah has been employed by the state of Wisconsin for the past four years as state lecturer on cooking in farmers' institutes. She is a graduate of the Milwaukee Cooking school and is much encouraged by the success of her work, but she complains that her puplis are chiefly interested in methods of preparing sweets and pastry.

Life In Mars.

Megamicros, as we shall call our man of the earth transported in his sleep to the new Mars, wakes up, opens his eyes and finds himself in bed in his room. All the things in it are familiar to him—the furniture, clothes, books and wares are just where he had left them overnight. He does not suspect the trick that has been played on him. He stretches himself, throws up his arms, leaps from his bed, goes to the washstand, lifts the pitcher, puts on his clothes—and is greatly surprised.

All these actions are of a common character and consist in raising masses to a certain height. His water pitcher, for instance, holds two liters, new measure. On the earth these two liters, representing two kilograms, require a certain effort to be raised, say, to the height of 30 centimeters. But on Mars these two liters weigh only two Martian kilograms, or 16 ounces less in in earthly weight. Further, he does not have to lift them to a height of 30 centimeters, but of only 15 centimeters, his size being diminished one-half, so that the work to be performed is reduced to one-thirty-second. On the other hand, his strength, which is proportional to the volume or the mass of his muscles, is only reduced to one-eighth. Consequently the effort he is required to make is four times less. His water pitcher seems extremely light, so do his clothes. He probably remarked the same thing when he threw up his arms and jumped from his bed, but simply thought he was in unusually good spirits.—M. J. Delboeuf in Popular Science Monthly.

MOTHERHOOD.

Mrs. Pinkham Declares No Woman Need Despair.

There are many curable causes for sterility in women. One of the most common is general debility, accompanied by a peculiar condition of the blood.

Write freely and fully to Mrs. Pinkham. Her address is Lynn, Mass. She will tell you, free of charge, the cause of your trouble and what course to take. Believe me, under right conditions, you have a fair chance to become the joyful mother of children. MRS. LUCY LYTLE, 255 Henderson St., Jersey City, N. J., certainly thinks so. She says:

"I am more than proud of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and cannot find words to express the good it has done me. I was troubled very badly with the leucorrhœa and severe womb pains. From the time I was married, in 1882, until last year, I was under the doctor's care. We had no children. I have had nearly every doctor in Jersey City, and have been to Belvin Hospital, but all to no avail. I saw Mrs. Pinkham's advertisement in the paper, and have used five bottles of her medicine. It has done more for me than all the doctors I ever had. It has stopped my pains, and has brought me a fine little girl. I have been well ever since my baby was born. I heartily recommend Mrs. Pinkham's medicine to all women suffering from sterility."

OVER THE BAR.

Blindly the awkward sea
Comes stumbling over the bar,
And the soldier ship I see
On the field of the ocean war;
But the signals gleam and the dangers seem
Idle and faint and far.

Blindly the awkward waves
Come stumbling into the bay,
And the old, old sea behaves
Like a babe of yesterday;
But the lighthouse stands by the drifting sands
And the ships are saved to-day.

Blindly the awkward thought
Comes stumbling into my heart,
And old bosom battles fought
Are as play to this new art;
For a wilder sea hath imprisoned me,
And the love I cannot impart.

Blindly the awkward words
Keep settling in from afar,
Till they join, like autumn birds,
In a song that ends the war;
And the words break out in a gentle rout—
And my love is over the bar.

THE EARRINGS OF THE COUNTESS.

IT was in the palmiest days of the Second Empire. It was an evening in midwinter. The Paris season was at its height, and a brilliant audience had assembled at the Theatre Francais to witness the performance of Jules Sandeau's delightful play, "Mademoiselle de la Seigliere."

The Empress was present, graceful and beautiful; the Emperor at her side, wrapped in his favorite air of gloomy abstraction, which, like Lord Burleigh's celebrated nod, was supposed to mean so much, yet which, viewed by the impartial light of subsequent veracious history, seems to have signified so little. Several officers in glittering uniforms were in attendance, sparkling with decorations showered upon them by a grateful sovereign; and among these gallant warriors, conspicuous by reason of his attire, was a solitary, humble, black-coated civilian, in ordinary evening dress, with the inevitable speck of red at his buttonhole.

In a box, immediately opposite that occupied by their Imperial Majesties, was a young and exceedingly handsome Russian lady, Countess Ivanoff, concerning whose manifold fascinations the great world of Paris elected to interest itself considerably.

The beauty and wit of this fair northern enchantress were the theme of every masculine tongue, and her magnificent diamonds the envy of all feminine beholders. The Countess was accompanied by her husband, a man of distinguished appearance.

The curtain fell after the first act. The Emperor and Empress withdrew during the intermission. Many humbler mortals followed their example; among them Count Ivanoff, apparently in nowise disturbed by the fact that the "gilded youth" in the stalls were bringing a small battery of opera-glasses to bear upon the dazzling charms of his beautiful wife. The Countess leaned back in her luxurious chair, fanning herself, serenely indifferent to the interest she was exciting. In the dim light of her curtain-shaded box, the glitter of her splendid diamonds seemed to form a sort of luminous halo round her graceful head; a myriad starry brilliants gleamed among the masses of her gold-brown hair, and two priceless stones flashed and twinkled in her little shell-tinted ears.

The Count had been gone but a few minutes when there was a gentle knock at the door, and, in answer to the Countess' "Enter," the usher appeared, and said, deferentially:

"Pardon, Mme. la Comtesse; a gentleman charged with a message from Her Majesty the Empress waits in the corridor, and desires to know if madame will have the goodness to receive him."

"Certainly. Enter, I beg of you, monsieur," replied the Countess, as she recognized the distinguished-looking civilian she had already noticed in close proximity to the Emperor in the Imperial box.

The visitor advanced a few steps, and, standing in deep shadow, said with grave dignity:

"I trust my intrusion may be pardoned. I am desired by Her Majesty to ask a favor of Mme. le Comtesse, and, at the same time, to beg that she will have the goodness to excuse a somewhat unusual request."

"The obligation will be mine if I can fulfill even the least of Her Majesty's wishes," replied the Countess.

"The case is this," explained the gentleman. "An argument has arisen concerning the size of the diamonds in your earrings and those of the Countess Woronzoff. The Empress begs that you will intrust one of your pendants to her care for a few moments, as the only satisfactory method of disposing of the vexed question. I will myself return it the instant Her Majesty gives it back into my keeping."

"With the greatest pleasure," agreed the Countess, detaching the precious jewel forthwith, and depositing it, without misgiving, in the outstretched palm of the Imperial messenger. The Countess bestowed a smile and gracious bow of dismissal upon Her Majesty's distinguished ambassador.

Shortly afterward Count Ivanoff returned. "I have been talking to Dumont," he remarked, as he seated himself. "Clever fellow, Dumont. I am not surprised at the Emperor's partiality for him; he must find him useful when he is in want of an idea."

"Who is Dumont?" inquired the Countess, with languid interest.

"That is rather a difficult question," replied the Count, smiling; "there are [illegible] editions of his biography—all different, probably none of them true. Look, he has just entered the Emperor's box—the man in the black coat."

"Is that M. Dumont?" exclaimed the Countess; "if so, he has been here while you were away. He came, on the part of the Empress, and carried off one of my earrings which Her Majesty wished to compare with one of the Countess Woronzoff's."

"Dumont! Impossible! I was talking to him the whole time I was absent."

"Nevertheless, dear, he has been here, and has taken my earring. See! it is gone."

"Effectively," agreed the Count, with a grim smile; "but Dumont has not taken it. It is to the last degree unlikely that the Empress would make such a request. Depend upon it, you have been the victim of a thief made up as Dumont."

"Impossible!" cried the Countess in her turn. "The affair is absolutely as I tell you. It was the veritable M. Dumont who came into this box and took away my diamond. Only wait a little, and he will bring it back intact."

"To wait a little is to lessen the chance of its recovery. I will go and inquire of Dumont, if I can get at him, whether he has been seized with a sudden attack of kleptomania; because the idea of the Empress having sent him roaming about the theater borrowing a lady's jewels I regard as preposterous. Ah, these Parisian thieves!"

With this the Count departed, and the second act was nearly at an end before he returned. In the meantime the Countess perceived that she was an object of interest to the occupants of the Imperial box.

"I was right," whispered the Count, re-entering and bending over his wife's chair. "Dumont knows nothing of your earring, and, needless to say, the Empress never sent him upon such an errand. I have put the matter into the hands of the police, and they will do all that is possible to recover it."

The Countess was duly commiserated by sympathizing friends, but nothing more was heard of the jewel until the following day.

Early in the afternoon the Countess was about to start for her daily drive in the Bois. The frozen snow lay deep upon the ground, and her sleigh, with its two jet-black Russian horses jingling their bells merrily in the frosty air, stood waiting in the courtyard while the Countess donned her furs.

A servant entering announced that an officer of the police in plain clothes asked permission to speak with Mme. la Comtesse concerning the lost diamond.

"Certainly," said madame, graciously; "let the officer be shown into the boudoir."

Into the boudoir presently came the Countess, stately, beautiful, fur-clad, buttoning her little gloves. Near the door stood a short, wiry-looking man, with keen, black eyes, closely cropped hair, and compact, erect, military figure. The small man bowed profoundly while he said, with the utmost respect, at the same time laying a letter upon the table:

"I am sent by order of the chief of police to inform Mme. la Comtesse that the stolen diamond has been satisfactorily traced, but there is, unfortunately, some little difficulty connected with its identification. I am charged, therefore, to beg that Mme. la Comtesse will have the goodness to intrust the fellow earring to the police, for a short period, in order that it may be compared with the one found in the possession of the suspected thief. Madame will find that the letter I bring corroborates my statement."

The Countess glanced hastily through the letter, and, ringing the bell, desired that her maid might be told to bring the remaining earring immediately, this was done, and the dapper little man, bowing deferentially, departed with the precious duplicate.

The Countess descended to her sleigh and drove to the club to call for her husband. Crossing the Place de la Concorde, she related to him the latest incident.

"You never were induced to give up the other!" cried Count Ivanoff, incredulously.

"But I tell you, dear, an officer of the police came himself to fetch it, bringing a letter from his superiors vouching for the truth of his statement."

"If the prefect himself had come, I don't think I should have been cajoled into letting him have it after last night's experience," laughed her husband. "However, for the second time, we will inquire."

The coachman turned and drove, as directed, to the Bureau of Police, at which the Count had lodged his complaint the night before. After a somewhat protracted delay, the Count rejoined his wife with a semi-grim look of amusement on his handsome face.

"The police know nothing of your detective or his epistolary efforts," he said, drawing the fur rug up to his chin as the impatient horses sped away over the frozen snow; "your second earring has been netted by another member of the light-fingered fraternity, and, upon my honor, I think he was the more accomplished artist of the two!"

And from that unlucky day to this the Countess Ivanoff's diamond earrings knew her pretty ears no more.—The Argonaut.

Where Grass Is a Curiosity.

At the London county council meeting the chairman of the bridge committee stated that about fifty vehicles and 500 passengers per hour passed through the Blackwall tunnel. He incidentally remarked that a pathetic point was that children passed through to the south side of the river and carried back to the east tufts of grass as though they were curiosities.

The prettier a girl's spring dress is, the longer it may be known that her father is fussing about it.

Words of Wisdom, and Thoughts Worth Pondering Upon Spiritual and Moral Subjects—Gathered from the Religious and Secular Press.

The Young Chaplain.

ONE night in 1825 a clergyman was taking tea with John C. Calhoun, then Secretary of War. Suddenly Mr. Calhoun said to his guest:

"Will you accept the place of chaplain and professor of ethics at West Point? If you will, I will appoint you at once."

The clergyman was Charles P. McIlvaine, then but 25 years of age, and subsequently known as the "Bishop of Ohio." He accepted the appointment because West Point then had an unsavory reputation. There was not a Christian among officers and cadets. Many of them were skeptics, and the others were coolly indifferent to religion. He was received as gentlemen receive a gentleman, but no one showed the least sympathy with him as a clergyman. For months his preaching seemed as words spoken in the air. His first encouragement was an offensive expression.

He was walking home from church one Sunday a few feet in advance of several officers. "The chaplain's preaching is getting hotter and hotter," he heard one of them say.

In a few days he received another bit of encouragement. He was dining with a company at the house of an officer. A lieutenant, a scoffer hurled a bitter sneer at clergymen. The chaplain left the table. The officers threatened to send the lieutenant to "Coventry" if he did not apologize. He called and asked the chaplain's pardon.

Another officer took offense at one of the chaplain's sermons and wrote him a bold avowal of skeptical opinions.

The chaplain, seeing in these incidents evidence that the chronic indifference was giving way to opposition, persevered. But opposition was all the encouragement he received during the year. Not a cadet had visited him or even sought his acquaintance.

But one Saturday, the only day the cadets were allowed to visit an officer without special permission, one of the most popular of the cadets knocked at the chaplain's door. He wished to begin the Christian life then and there, and asked for counsel. In a day or two another cadet called on a similar errand; then another and another. Then several officers came. A meeting for prayer was appointed twice a week. It was the first public prayer meeting held at West Point. Officers and cadets crowded in, though all who came professed thereby to begin a religious life. At first it required as much courage to enter that room as it did to lead a forlorn hope.

One of the cadets was Leonidas Polk, afterward bishop of Louisiana. Intelligent, high-toned and commanding in person, he was the conspicuous cadet. Seeing that it was his duty to make a public confession of his faith in Christ, he asked for baptism.

After baptizing him the chaplain made a brief address, closing with a charge to be faithful. "Amen," responded Polk, in a voice that rang through the church. The "amen" was from the heart. Immediately the baptized cadet became a missionary to his comrades.

A solemnity pervaded the academy during the remaining two years that this clergyman served as chaplain. Half the corps became Christian men. Several of them, leaving the army, were promoted to the ministry. Many of those who entered the army rose to eminence. They adorned their profession and the Christian religion.

This era in West Point was created through divine aid by a young man who simply did his duty patiently and left the result with God.

The Bible Meets All Emergencies.

The Bible meets all the emergencies of life. Some one has said that a religion in order to prove its truth must be capable of standing the stress of three great moments in a man's history; that of his keenest intellectual illumination, that of his intensest emotional feeling, and that of his facing the final fact of death. Let us test the Bible by this canon. Does it meet the tory; that of his keenest intellectual ilture? We might dwell on the fact that the most progressive, cultivated and influential peoples are those in which the Bible are enthroned as supreme.

Who can compute the debt which the United States, England and Germany—the nations which have the promise of the future—owe to the authorized version and Luther's translation of the sacred volume? "Hold fast to the Bible," said General Grant once. "Write its precepts in your hearts and practice them in your lives. To the influence of this book we are indebted for all the progress made in true civilization, and to this we must look as our guide in the future." "The Bible," said President Andrew Jackson, as he lay dying, "is the rock on which our republic rests."

But turn to the sons of culture, the children of light, and ask them for their witness. Goethe was no crude and prejudiced Philistine. All modern literature of the higher kind has been profoundly influenced by him; there was little worth knowing that he had not mastered. "Let culture and science go on advancing," he said, "and the mind progress as it may, it will never go beyond the elevation and moral culture of Christianity, as it glistens and shines forth in the Gospels. The greater the intellectual progress of the nations, the more fully possible will it also become to employ the Bible with both as the foundation and instrument of education, if that education by which, not pedants, but truly wise men, are formed."

Or take Goethe's disciple, Carlyle, the greatest prophet in modern England. To him the Bible is the "one book, wherein for thousands of years the spirit of man has found light and nourishment, and a response to whatever was deepest in his heart." Emerson attributes the place of the Bible in the world not to miracles, but to the fact that "it came out of a profounder depth of thought than any other book." Browning's loftiest verse receives an added grace from the words of Scripture; Tennyson's melody catches a sweeter tone from the strain of the Gospel. And of Longfellow, Whittier and Lowell we may say that their songs but interpret in deathless music the riches of Holy Writ. Strike out of the thoughts of genius all that they owe to the truths of inspiration, and the glory vanishes, the splendor fades into the light of common day. It would be as if some ruthless hand put out the lights of heaven, and left us to the flickering wicks of earth.—Samuel McComb, in New York Observer.

Saintly Faces.

Sometimes, in passing through a crowd, we see a face that attracts us by its sweetness of expression. Perhaps it is an old face, crowned with a glory of hoary hairs; yet love, joy and peace shine out of every dot and wrinkle in it. Sometimes it is a young face that beams with health and purity and beauty. But whether old or young, when we see that unmistakable soul-light in a face, we know that the heart behind is pure, the life is good, and that the body thus illuminated is the temple of the Holy Spirit. To keep the mind occupied with good, pure, useful, beautiful and divine thoughts precludes the possibility of thinking about, and thus being tempted by, things sinful, low or gross. It is because Paul knew this that he says so earnestly: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are of good report, think on these things." In the well-formed habit of thinking pure thoughts lies the secret of being pure in heart; and in the daily and nightly mediation in the law of the Lord is a safeguard against many of the sins which defile the carnal heart, and debase and blacken the countenance.—Scottish Reformer.

As Ye Would.

If I should see
A brother languishing in sore distress,
And I should turn and leave him comfortless,
When I might be
A messenger of hope and happiness,
How could I ask to have what I denied
In my own hour of bitterness supplied?

If I might sing
A little song to cheer a fainting heart,
And I should seal my lips and sit apart
When I might bring
A bit of sunshine for life's ache and smart,
How could I hope to have my grief relieved
If I kept silent when my brother grieved?

And so I know
That day is lost wherein I fail to lend
A helping hand to some wayfaring friend.
But if it show
A burden lightened by the cheer I send,
Then do I hold the golden hours well spent
And lay me down to sleep in sweet content.

The Basket of Water.

"My son," said an Arab chief, "bring me a basket of water from the spring."

The boy tried and tried to fill the basket, and before he could get back to his father's tent the water leaked. At last he returned and said:

"Father, I have tried to fill the basket, but the water will not stay in."

"My son," said the old chief, "what you say is true. The water did not stay in, but see how clean the basket is. So will it be with your heart. You may not be able to remember all the good words you hear, but keep trying to treasure them and they will make your heart clean and pure."—Religious Intelligencer.

Subjects of Thought.

If we love those we lose, can we altogether lose those we love?

What do we live for, if it is not to make life less difficult for each other?

It is more wholesome for the moral nature to be restrained, even by arbitrary power, than to be allowed to exercise arbitrary powers.

He that lends an easy and credulous ear to calumny is either a man of very ill morals, or has no more sense and understanding than a child.

In our judgment of human transactions the law of optics is reversed; we see the most indistinctively the objects which are close around us.

If half the time were spent in practicing either religion or philosophy that is spent in discussing it and arguing about it, the world would have less need of both.

A character which combines the love of enjoyment with the love of duty and the ability to perform it is the one whose unfoldings give the greatest promise of perfection.

Every one must know that his best life is his silent life; his truest growth, his silent growth. What I am, what is my life, myself, as inside; and inside is all the work done that fashions me. The soul is not made as the statue is, with click of hammer and chip of chisel from without; but the soul is made of its own ingrowth, as a peach is.

Gates for Handling Hogs.

The device shown in the accompanying illustrations for handling hogs when they are to be rung or for other purposes, is very useful on the ordinary farm. The first picture represents a chute and gates which will shut behind and before the hog and hold him in position. There is just room enough for him to stick his nose out and while in this position rings can be inserted. The sides of the chutes must be much closer together than shown in the engraving, so that the hog cannot turn about. In fact the width should be just sufficient to allow a hog to pass through. In the second illustration is represented the side view of another gate and pen so arranged that the door can be opened and shut without getting into the pen. These devices are so convenient about the hog lots that it is a surprise that more of them are not in use.—Orange Judd Farmer.

HOG CHUTE.

DEVICE FOR OPENING GATE.

Manure for Strawberries.

The strawberry plantation requires very heavy manuring to produce its best yield. Every year on most plants there is a succession of berries, the first and second pickings being almost always larger and finer than those that ripen later. But if the later season is very wet, as it sometimes is, we have known the later crop to ripen up and be very nearly as good as the first. This suggests that in addition to the top dressing applied in winter there ought to be an additional fertilization, while the crop is forming, and this last should be always dissolved in water, so as to be readily available. Nitrate of potash is the best manure to be thus applied. This is saltpetre, and costs five to six cents per pound. But a very small lump dissolved in warm water and applied freely will keep the vines fresh and vigorous to the last, and will make a great increase in the size of the fruit. The labor of applying liquid manure is more than its cost, and is greater than can be generally afforded for any other crop than the strawberry.

Handy Wheelbarrow.

The Iowa Homestead gives an illustration of a handy wheelbarrow that may be used about the farm. It is made from the two front or the two hind wheels of a little express wagon which has seen its better days. This wheelbarrow has the advantage of having the load over the wheels and sustained by them instead of being held by the one wheeling it. The design explains itself, and the wheelbarrow can be made very easily if the wheels are at hand.

HANDY FARM WHEELBARROW.

The Asparagus Bed.

To make a new asparagus bed dig a trench two feet deep and fill it with rich, well-rotted manure to the depth of twelve inches. Over the manure scatter bone meal and sulphate of potash, any quantity preferred. Then cover with three inches of rich dirt, and on the dirt place the roots, using 2-year-olds growth, about two feet apart, as they will thicken in the bed every year. Cover with rich dirt, and throw the soapsuds over the bed whenever possible to do so. Once an asparagus bed is made it should last for twenty years.

Buying Cheap Fertilizers.

There is no longer much desire among well-informed farmers to get the lowest priced fertilizers with the idea that these are therefore the cheapest. It is impossible to cheat nature. All the elements of fertility, mineral or nitrogenous, cost money, and if little money is given for fertilizers, we can expect but little good to the crop from them. When we take into account that much of the expense of commercial fertilizers consists in the cost of distributing them evenly through the soil, it will be seen that the highest priced, if also the best, may be really the cheapest.

Unplowed Headlands.

It is the practice of many farmers in plowing grass land, especially for hoed crops, to leave an unplowed space, usually called a headland, on which the horse can turn when used in cultivating. But with a careful horse this care is not necessary in growing corn or potatoes, though the nurseryman's more valuable stock may justify it. In growing corn, some farmers plant two or three rows of potatoes next the fence. But these scattering rows of potatoes are difficult to harvest, as the wagon has to be drawn all around a field to gather a few potatoes. We used, in the later years of our farming, to plant corn out to the end of the row. If, while small, a hill of corn was stepped on, there it still time to plant a hill of beans. Yet we always noticed that the outside rows of corn ripened earlier and had better ears than those in the middle of the field. Most corn is planted too closely to yield the largest amounts of grain.—American Cultivator.

Digestibility of Ensilage.

There can be no doubt that ensilaged food, being succulent, is much more digestible in winter than the dry food that it then supersedes. If there is a little fermentation in it, that shows that the food is already partly decomposed and more ready for the gastric juices to act on. But to effect this advantage the succulent ensilage has lost some of its carbonaceous and more of its nitrogenous matter. This is represented by the carbonic acid gas at the top of the silo, which is relied upon to keep it sweet by excluding oxygen and preventing further fermentation.

New Cisterns.

It is a hard matter to use the water from a newly cemented cistern. The common way is to let it fill up and then stand awhile, then draw the water out and even then the next filling will taste of the cement. Instead of all this labor and waste of time and water, take pearline or salsoda, dissolve it, and scrub the cement thoroughly after it is hard. After scrubbing, rinse the cistern out clean and remove the water. The cistern will then be ready for the water and will taste very little of the cement, and can be used at once.

Cheap Sweet Potato Plants.

A correspondent of the American Agriculturist says that when sweet potato vines are about 18 inches long, cut off 12 or 14 inches and set out as shown in the illustration. Treated in this way, this planted vine will raise the best of potatoes and its removal will not injure the original plant.

Rust in Carnations.

A writer in an English paper gives this recipe for preventing rust in carnations, which he received from a gardener in Germany, whose plants were unusually fine and in healthy condition. He mixes two pounds of vitriol and four of freshly slacked lime in twenty-seven gallons of water, and stirs well together, until it is clear, not blue, and then he adds two pounds of sugar and mixes all again. With this he syringes his plants once a week, early in the day. The syringing should be done quickly, finely and evenly.

Arbor Vitae Hedges.

In order to have a full hedge the plants should be about two feet apart in the row and carefully trimmed once a year. In the fall loosen the top soil on both sides of the hedge and apply wood ashes. Keep a close watch for the basket worm, which does considerable damage to evergreen hedges of this kind. The plant is best known to some as "flat cedar," because the leaf is flat. It is one of the most beautiful ornamental plants grown.

Peanuts.

Peanuts require a light soil, sandy loam being excellent. The seeds are planted about three inches deep and the soil kept loose. They seem to be benefited by lime or wood ashes on the soil. The plant is very pretty while growing, and a few of them in a garden add to its attractiveness. Plant the seeds in May, or as soon as possible after danger from frost is over. The seeds should be removed from the shells, and care should be taken not to break the crowy skin covering of the seeds.

When to Plant the Garden.

Do not be deceived by the advance warm weather of spring and put in the garden crops too soon. It will be time enough to complete the planting when the apple trees begin to bloom. A late frost will destroy all tender plants. Cool nights are also detrimental to the growth of such plants as squash, beans, melons, tomatoes and corn. The ground must be warm before plants will make headway in growth.

NAMES FOR NAVAL VESSELS.

Uncle Sam's Ships Decorated Chiefly with Geographical Terms.

The nomenclature of vessels of the United States navy is deficient in names made famous by acts of naval heroism, but abounds in geographical terms, which make a list of Uncle Sam's ships resemble an extract from a postal guide. There is a class of vessels in the English navy known as the "admiral" class, where the names of Nelson, Anson, Rodney, Benbow and other naval leaders may be found, and this same method of perpetuating the names of admirals exists in Russia. The custom of preserving the names of victories at sea is also observed in many countries by naming vessels after the place near where the fight occurred. But in the United States navy these customs cannot be carried out, and although the name of Farragut is honored and revered by the navy, no large ship of any class bears the name of the hero of Mobile Bay.

In the torpedo boat class there are exceptions to this rule, and the fleet contains an Ericsson, a Cushing, a Porter, a Foote, a Dahlgren, a Dupont, a Goldsborough and others.

The single turreted monitors bear Indian names, such as Comanche, Catskill, Canonicus, Mahopac, Montauk, Wyandotte, but not to the exclusion of other names, for the list includes the names of Ajax and Manhattan. In the old wooden navy the names of Franklin, Adams and Marion are still preserved, along with Yantic, Alert and Nipsic. The Indian name is also represented in this class by several vessels, among which are the Mohican, the Monocacy and the Omaha.

The double turreted monitors have names which are to be found nowhere in ship nomenclature except in the United States navy. Among them are the Amphitrite, the Miantonomah and the Monadnock. The Vicksburg and the Annapolis are composite gunboats and are named after places where important military operations took place. No set rule seems to obtain for the naming of gunboats. The list includes the Petrel, the Machias, the Nashville, the Helena, the Concord, the Bancroft and the Bennington. The armored cruisers like the New York and the Boston are named after cities, as are the protected cruisers such as the Atlanta, the Baltimore, the Charleston, the Chicago, the Cincinnati, the Columbia, the Newark, the Raleigh and the San Francisco, although the Olympia is also of that class. The armored battle ships, of which the Maine was a good specimen, are all named after States, except the Kearsarge, which by special act of Congress was named to perpetuate the old ship which had won distinction in the famous fight with the Alabama before the days of the steel battle ship.

The old wooden navy is made up of the venerable invalids, all put away in comfortable quarters. The Constitution is the training ship at Newport; the Vermont is used as a receiving ship in the Brooklyn navy yard; the Dale is used by the Maryland Naval Reserve; the Independence is the receiving ship at Mare Island, and the Jamestown is a quarantine ship. The Monongahela is attached to the training squadron, the New Hampshire is the headquarters of the New York Naval Reserve, and the Saratoga is a nautical school ship.

The man whose name is the same as that of some city may, if he becomes a naval hero, see a United States ship bear his name, but unless that combination exists it is doubtful if ever heroism would add the name of an individual to the list of United States war ships.—New York Tribune.

A Shrewd Photographer.

A Fifth avenue photographer has lately completed a system by which his pictures of babies have become famous. He has discarded all the familiar expedients of his profession to persuade very young children to submit to the camera and his scheme has been completely successful. One part of his gallery has been fitted up like a nursery. Around the room at convenient points are situated cameras and these are in charge of his assistants. The photographer devotes his attention to the baby. He tries all the toys in turn, gets on as intimate terms as possible with the baby after such short acquaintance and gradually lures the unsuspecting infant into looking his best. When pose and expression are satisfactory he gives a signal to one of his assistants at the cameras and the trick is done. Mothers bring their babies from all quarters to this tactful photographer. It would be a difficult matter to find any child who would not after ten minutes' session with toys, exhibit some expression that his parents would be proud of. The artist catches that expression and as many other agreeable ones as possible. The final delight comes to the mother when she receives the proofs, not sent as proofs usually are, but mounted on a large piece of cardboard which makes it possible for her to compare them simultaneously. This wise man has left nothing undone which could strengthen his hold on the babies and their photographs.—New York Sun.

Clever Stage Effect.

An ingenious stage waterfall devised by Mr. Gaillard has attracted attention at the Paris opera halls. It is made of tulle stretched on frames imitating the curves of a fall. Behind it little streams of water are discharged through perforated pipes against a metal plate, so as to throw a spray upon the tulle. When the electric light is played on this the effect is magical.

When shiftless people can't think of any other way to annoy their neighbors they get a dog to howl through the night.

No man with any knowledge of law ever mistakes the will for the deed.

WAR AND TRADE

It is a curious fact that in May, the first month of the war, commercial failures were smaller than for May, 1897, when the country was at peace. It is another curious fact that the longer the war goes on the less is heard about it in commercial circles. One might easily fancy, from the general indifference regarding it, that war was the natural condition of the country. Except in Wall street there is positively no visible effect on general trade. At the outset a few lines were disturbed, but they quickly became adapted to their new conditions, and business is now as peaceful and humdrum as usual.

The pivot on which everything is now swinging is contained in the single word, Crops. One hears nothing else, either here or in the East. From all of the great grain prodcing sections of the land except California come reports of brilliant crop outlooks, and if they are realized the yield for 1898 will be unprecedented. This prospect, with the termination of the May deal in wheat in Chicago, has caused a sharp decline in wheat, though at the close more firmness is apparent, and a reaction is not improbable. Other grains have sympathized more or less, and several have gone down, too, but corn is higher under a heavy demand for export.

Possibly the brilliant showing of the wheat crop has stimulated business, but at any rate reports from all over the country indicate a fine wholesale and retail trade, and the present influx of fall orders leads to the opinion that the fall trade will be the best seen for years. All lines of merchandise are participating in this demand, which shows that the inquiry for goods is legitimate and popular, and therefore an indication of an increased purchasing capacity on the part of the public. This is borne out by the continued gain in the bank clearings, these for the whole country last week being 30.3 per cent more than for the same week in 1897. The failures are also smaller, being 222 for the week, against 241 for the corresponding week last year. The continued decrease in these failures is one of the most gratifying signs of the times.

The great staples, which financiers watch with vigilance, are exhibiting increased activity, and the tendency in prices is upward rather than downward. Cotton and wool, which have been the dullest of all lines for some monthf, are the most conspicuous examples of this gain, and both are firm, though business in the lptter is still light. Wheat leads the export list, the foreign shipments for the week aggregating 5,248,086 bushels, against 4,309,000 bushels last week, 2,020,000 bushels in this week a year ago, 3,209,000 bushels in 1896, 2,991,000 bushels in 1895, and 2,742,000 bushels in 1894. The demand for iron continues phenomenal, the monthly consumption of pig-iron amounting to 1,000,000 tons. The demand is largely for agricultural implements, showing a prosperyus condition of the farming community, though structural work, for building operations comes in for a good share.

There are indications that the public is drifting back into Wall street, being attracted by the recent improvement in prices, though the professional manipulators still hold the major part of the market. A pronounced victory at Santiago de Cuba would probably add a further stimulus to this great trading mart, and draw back still more of the public. As it is there has been a marked improvement in Government and railroad bonds bonds, with increased buying by London.

Locally there is little new to report. Throughout the whole Pacific Coast there were only ten failures last week, against seventeen for the same week lazt year, last week's record being almost unprecedented. The grain markets continue quiet, and beyond the decline in wheat show no particular change. Merchandise is going off well and quotations exhibit few fluctuations. The hay, grain and fruit crops are now coming forward, and the prices received are rather above those of last year, as a rule, while the quantity and quality of all three are superior to the indications of a month ago. Still the output of the State is far below the normal this year, and there will be little if any wheat for export.—Call.

Review: We drew attention attention last week to the fact that on account of sulphur being contraband of war the supply in this country was getting very scarce, and that, as a consequence, prices of it were advancing. We suggested then, and repeat the suggestion now, that attention should be given to the sulphur deposits in Inyo county in this State, stating that at $50 a ton it would pay to investigate those Inyo deposits. Now comes the Engineering and Mining Journal of New York and emphasizes our utterances, saying:

"The high price of sulphur and the possibility of a short supply for some time to come, unless the war with Spain should come to an end sooner than expected, ought to give an opportunity to the owners of the sulphur deposits in various parts of the United States. The increased demand for sulphur which exists, and the fact that it is held to be contraband of war, so that vessels decline cargoes for this country, have combined produce a scarcity in the supply of Italian brimstone here, and a corresponding increase in prices, which are now quoted as $24.50 per ton for seconds. The same circumstances present also much encouragemsnt to our producers of pyrites to find new deposits of ore."

Since that was written prices have further advanced, and "firsts" are now quoted in the "fifties" with scant supply.

As further evidence of the present scarcity of sulphur it may be stated that prices on nearly all grades of "news" paper have been advanced ½ cent a pound on the Los Angeles market, with every probability of further advances.

The Spriggs Musical Extravaganza Company gave entertainments to fair houses here Monday and Tuesday night. The musical moke is an artist, in fact, a whole show in himself.

WAR NEWS.

June 4—The collier Merrimac, under command of Naval Hobson, steamed into the harbor of Santiago de Cuba, and was torpedoed by her own crew. She sank immediately, thus effectually blocking the harbor. Hobson and the six men accompanying him are now Spanish prisoners of war.

Seventeen American ships are in front of Santiago. The city is in a state of panic, and food is becoming very scarce.

June 6—A general bombardment of the fortifications of Santiago began at 7:45 this morning, and in a few minutes the cannonading became terriffic. At 1:30 p. m. the cannonading still continued. A special from Cape Haytien reports that 5000 U. S. troops were landed at Aguadores, a short distance east of Santiago harbor. The have several heavy siege guns, and have effected a junction with 3000 insurgents under Gen Garcia. They will attack the Spanish from the hills above town. Owing to the high elevation the heavy guns of the Spanish fleet will be useless.

Capt. Gridley of the Olympia, one of the heroes of Dewey's victory is dead.

All men in camp at San Francisco are being paid one month in advance. $840,000 00 was disbursed.

It is probable that as soon as Cervera's fleet is captured or destroyed, that the flying squadron will proceed to Spain and attack her naval vessels there.

Insurgents in Manila have captured Cavite, and have taken 1800 Spanish prisoners.

American sloop-of-war Mohican left San Francisco Monday for Honolulu, where she relieves the Bennington, which goes to Manila.

Two Martial Poems.

Soon after the close of the civil war Cassius M. Clay, T. C. Durant of the Union Pacific railroad, Commodore Boggs, Curtis Guild, the secretary of the Russian minister, and two other gentlemen were guests at a little supper at the Fifth Avenue hotel, New York. The conversation turned upon Tennyson's "Charge of the Light Brigade," which one of the guests declared to be the most martial poem ever written.

"Bah!" exclaimed one of the company, half in jest. "The rhythm is faulty, and some of the lines remind me of pumpkins rolling over a barn floor. For instance:

"Some one had blundered,
Rode the six hundred!

"I defy any one to name an American poem so inspiriting," retorted the enthusiastic lover of the British poet. Mr. Guild, who reports the conversation in his "Chat About Celebrities," suggested that there was Holmes' poem of "Old Ironsides."

"Do you know the lines?" was demanded.

"Oh, yes. I declaimed them more than 30 years ago at school."

"Well, I challenge you to recite 'Old Ironsides,' and I will recite 'The Charge of the Light Brigade,' and we will abide by the verdict of the company as to which is the more inspiriting."

"The Charge" was recited first, and it was done admirably. At its conclusion, after the applause had ceased, Mr. Guild began back in "A Metrical Essay," in which the author re-presented the poem with an introduction and then followed it with the well known verses, beginning:

Aye, tear her tattered ensign down!

"By the time," he writes, "I was half through the first verse I saw the face of Commodore Boggs light up and his eye flash. Cash Clay, too, was all attention. The poet's lines had their effect. As the declaimer ended with

"Nail to the mast her holy flag,
Set every threadbare sail,
And give her to the god of storms,
The lightning and the gale,

the brave old commodore brought down his fist on the table, exclaiming, 'That's so, by Jupiter!' and Clay leaped to his feet, shouting, 'Hurrah for the American flag!'"—Youth's Companion.

Frenchy.

A 5-year-old who happened to be present when his auntie's new hat came home the other day was much impressed by the praise accorded it on all sides. One word, however, puzzled him. "Beautiful" and "sweet" and "elegant"—all these terms were clear enough, but when it came to "Frenchy" he was at a loss to know what was meant. "What does 'Frenchy' mean, mamma?" he asked. "What is 'Frenchy?'" His mother therefore explained that "Frenchy" meant all the other nice things that had been said about the hat and more too. It was the weight of worldly encomium. "When you wish to say that a thing is particularly pretty and graceful and artistic, when you want to give it the very highest praise," she said, "you call it 'Frenchy.'"

To all of which the 5-year-old listened with that intent literalness indicative of his species. Some days after this, when the arrival of the hat had presumably been forgotten by every one, the 5-year-old, with his aunt, attended divine service at a well known ritualistic church for the first time. Upon his return his mother asked him what he thought of it all. "Oh, I liked it so much!" was the answer. "It was so Frenchy!"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

She Saw John Adams.

At a recent celebration in Boston Mrs. Julia Ward Howe "sweet and gracious as ever," gave a delightful reminiscence of her father, John Adams. "Some-[illegible] when, she said, "perhaps no one else in the company is old enough to have done. When I was 6 years old, I was brought to visit my maternal grandmother, living at Quincy. The children of the Quincy family, in taking me about the town, once led me into a room in which there was a man who looked to me then very, very old. He wore a black silk skullcap. My guides, pointing him out to me, said: 'Look! Look! That's John Adams, who has been president of the United States.' I don't think the fact that he had been president meant much to my mind then, but his appearance and the manner of the children made a profound impression on me."—Woman's Journal.

Varied Matrimony.

It was the boast of Levi Rogers, who died at Perry, O. T., the other day, that he had been married seven times and that each wife had been of a different nationality. Rogers was born in Georgia, and when a young man married an American girl, who died within six months. After that he married six times, his successive wives being Mexican, Bohemian, Indian, German, creole and finally a very black negress. The latter survives him, and Rogers always claimed that she was the best wife of the whole collection.

THE LITTLE OLD SHOE.

It is only a tiny shoe
That she touches with tender care,
A cunning little bit of a thing
That a baby used to wear.
And she gently raises it to her lips
And lovingly holds it there.

It is worn and faded and old,
But it brings up the happy past.
She sadly sighs as she thinks of the joys
That were too sweet to last.

In fancy she sees a little child
As it gambols upon the floor.
An elfilike creature with golden hair
Is cooing a baby song once more,
And a tear drops down on the tiny shoe
That the beautiful dream child wore.

"Ah, well," she sighs to herself,
"'Tis, alas, the will of the fates!
I used to be able to wear this shoe,
But now I take number eights."

ANIMALS AND MUSIC.

A Strange Experiment Made In a Zoological Garden.

A violinist was playing various airs before the cages of the animals. The bow, which had been passing backward and forward half drowsily, took up a gait that would have distanced one of the deer in the pen by the buffaloes' yard. Then there was a transformation scene in the home of the lioness as rapid and as complete as that of the tune. The cubs went into ecstacies. They rolled about, jumped, fell over one another, raced over their mother's recumbent body, and danced unrebuked on her head. They ceased their tantrums only with the ceasing of the music.

Then they gathered at the front bars of the cage again and silently and pathetically pleaded for more. Their plea was successful, and in response to the delicate flattery conveyed by their manner the player gave the lullaby once more. They simply sat and listened to it as silently as they had at the first. The transition to the jig music was once more made speedily. The first note of the lively air had barely left the violin before its riotous contagion had once more caught the cubs. They rollicked and rolled about and stopped only when the professor, fearing to tire their little limbs, took his bow from his fiddle and told them they had danced enough for debutantes.

The hyena is an uncanny brute. His very appearance goes a great way toward bearing out charges of graveyard robbery brought against him. He has no music in his soul nor room for any. Sweet sounds are to him so antipodal to everything in his nature that they inspire him with nothing but fear, and the most abject fear at that. When Professor Baker tried to interest the two skulking hyenas in his performance on the violin, they began trembling visibly at the first note's utterance, and then as the music swelled they sought the farthermost side of their prison and tried their best to squeeze their ungainly bodies through the bars to escape the melody.—Philadelphia Times.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, JUNE 10 1898

John Lewis has returned from San Francisco.

Sam Gruber is prospecting for placer gold in the Inyos.

The smelter at Darwin has started up and is now running full blast.

W. F. Matlack is again at his post after a week's camping in the foothills.

J. W. Murphy has returned from his trip to the northern end of the county.

Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Mack and family arrived home from Los Angeles last Friday.

An unusually rich body of lead has been struck in the Defiance mine at Darwin.

W. K Miller, the Mojave and Keeler stage owner, was in Independence over Sunday.

Clifford Baxter, T. F. Butler and Arthur Shepherd leave tomorrow morning for Kern Lakes.

In consequence of the war the price of tobacco has gone up. Three for a quarter sacks are 10: straight.

Omie Mairs has just received a handsome new buggy that is a little ahead of any vehicle in these "diggins."

"Garden sass" is becoming plentiful, and the blushing maiden's breath is now suggestive of the succulent onion.

J. D. Mairs arrived home Tuesday evening, after a month's absence, spent in Bakersfield, Los Angeles and other points.

Mrs. Annie Mates has opened the new hotel at Keeler, which is thoroughly equipped for the accomodation of travelers.

The Ancient and Honorable Order of Inyo Sheep "Gatherers," (title by courtesy) have been photographed, and now photos of the crowd are on sale by Julian Eibeshutz, K. D. I. A. O. I. S. T.

Dave Johnson and Dave Holland contemplate a fishing trip tomorrow. The expedition will be made with every provision for comfort, including a cook, a cow and a chafing dish.

Will and Dave Vaughn and Clarence Johnson spent two days fishing on Briar Creek this week. They made a catch of about 1200, a few of which were big enough to eat.

Dave Helland has returned from Lone Pine, where he has been shearing his sheep. Dave has abandoned his idea of a Klondike trip, and will look for a fortune nearer home.

The poll tax collector is now camping on trail of our male population, and receives the six dollars in such a bland way that one really feels cheerful after paying it.

W. R. Heath, representing the Commercial Union Insurance Company, and W. H. Webster of Brown Bros., San Francisco, "mit clothings," were among the commercial men here this week.

CALL HITS

Call: The best medals for the brave men who steamed into Santiago on the Merrimac would bear the inscription, "In God We Trust," and be good for $20 worth of goods anywhere in the world.

So the man who headed the expedition into the mouth of Santiago harbor is known as a non-combatant. It would be interesting to know what elements go to make up a fighter.

While the wisdom of the Government in landing mules in San Francisco from Baltimore at a cost of $231 may not be questioned, we confess to inability to discern that these mules can pull any more or sing any better than the California article at a third the price.

All are cordially invited to be present at these services.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

Amercans might laugh until their sides ached over misrepresentation by the Spanish press were it not so pitiful and pathetic an exhibition of the throes of a dying nation, a nation that historians in the long ago forecast as on its death bed. For it is as surely to die and pass out of the world's history as the day is to dawn and the night to set in; and this because of the immutable law of nature which visits punishment just where it belongs, with derdly and unerring aim.

But repressing laughter and standing in pitying attitude, let us quote sober and gravely uttered words, written into the the columns of sedate Spanish newspapers reckoned as leaders and molders of public opinion. For instance, a number of Madrid papers have recently declared that European statesmen well know that the late Confederates of the South are ready to raise the standard of revolt, and wait only for General Lee to give the word; that we have but a few thousand men in our army, mostly in the West, ill-fed, ill-paid, unwilling to fight, and capable of being transported to the Atlantic coast by but one line of railway, which is in bad order.

That the General Lee who will lead the American revolt is the same who headed the arms of rebellion in 1851 and 1855, and finally surrendered to General Lincoln; that the line of railroad over which all American troops must cross to reach a point opposite Cuba, passes over Niagara, a cataract 1,000 feet high, situated near Labrador, and that the passage over is a dangerous one; that the Indians are arising against the Yankees in Indiana, Illinois and Ohio, and are burning the farmer's houses and butchering their families, and that troops have been petioned for from Colorado, in the State of Denver.

That Buffalo Bill, a noted half-breed, has arisen against the whites, and is devastating the country near New York, his birthplace. That the climate of America is execrable, since when it is not snowing the heat is intorlerable, and that avalanches work devastation yearly to an enormous extent. That as for the people, the few whites live along the eastern shores, all the rest of the country being inhabited by Indians called cowboys, and by great herds of roaming cattle.

Finally here comes "El Progresso" of Havana, and declares to the readers of that progressive sheet in the capital of Cuba that Spanish ships have taken Boston, and the people of that city have fled into the interior. That the fleets are about to assault and capture New York. That the Yankees are half-starved, meat being 50 cents a pound with us and bread 25 cents a loaf. That we have been repulsed by the noble Spanish army and fleets everywhere. It declares that our soldiers are cowards and will not fight, that the threat to invade Cuba has been given up and that our ships have sunken, Manila retaken and Dewey's fleet utterly destroyed. The Spanish arms are so far advanced that it is safe to say that very soon the glorious Spnnish flag will once more wave over America as it did in the long ago, and Spain will resume her empire over the world as is right she should do. Union.

Post Among the myths which have been dissipated by the war between the United States and Spain, that concerning the formidable force of insurgents who have been fighting the Spanish soldiers in Cuba is at once the most comical and interesting. Before the struggle commenced Congress could hardly be restrained from recognizing the insurgent Government and granting it all the rights of belligerents. At that time it was said that there were from fifty to sixty thousand men in arms against Spain, and it was these men for whom the hearts of the chromo patriots bled, and to whom they desired to send arms and ammunition.

Throughout the debate in Congress there was, however, a delightful uncertainty concerning the rebels. The only information vouchsafed by anybody was founded upon rumors and reports from all sorts of people. A few days ago the United States schooner Gussie, with two companies of regular infantry and a lot of ammunition, made a landing on the Cuban shores for the purpose of meeting these insurgents and rendering them substantial assistance. It was expected that the rebels would meet the schooner on the beach in force. But, to the great dissapointment of everybody concerned, not an insurgent could be found. The officers on board the Gussie made a diligent search for the representatives of the "Government" to which they had been sent with supplies, and were unable to find them. Not the slightest assistance was rendered our forces in the brush with the Spaniards. The information was brought by our officers that, in their judgment, there are not three thousand men in arms against the Spanish in Cuba. They confess that they have been utterly unable to locate anything resembling an army, and they have brought back their ammunition and supplies, unable to find anybody to deliver them to.

The experience of the Gussie confirms what has been frequently said by well-informed persons concerning the strength of the insurgent forces in Cuba. There has never been a respectable force opposed to the Government: Bands guerrillas have at time made it exceedingly sultry or the Spanish soldiers, but anything like a battle has been practically unknown. The desperate struggles to which the yellow papers have treated us were largely the imagidation of their alleged correspondents.

Senator Foraker is now contributing a series of articles to the press on "How to Succeed in Politics." An article on the same subject by Mark Hanna would be more interesting.

All Have Disappeared.

And a California Man Was Glad to See Them Go.

Father and Son May Be Congratulated on the Outcome.

My blood was impure, and I was bothered for five years with pimples on my face and body. I had tried many different remedies in the effort to get rid of them, but none of the medicines I took did me any good. I noticed an advertisement of Hood's Sarsaparilla and decided to buy a bottle and begin taking this medicine. It did me so much good I kept on until I had taken seven bottles, when the eruptions were all gone and I was permanently cured. I owe my good health to Hood's Sarsaparilla. I gladly recommend the medicine to others and am thankful for the benefit I have derived from it. My father had a bad carbuncle. He took three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and was cured and he has had no more trouble of that kind since.

Startled the Old Man.

The acoustics of Statuary hall in the capitol at Washington are a matter of wonder to tourists, and many are the tricks played upon them. An exchange tells of a youth employed in one of the departments who was visited by his father recently and took the old gentleman to Statuary hall. There is a block about the center of the circular hall where, if one stands and faces the north, a sound uttered from the doorway, 40 feet in the rear, seems to be immediately in front of this block. The youth managed to get his father on the block and, attracting his attention toward a statue in front, slipped to the rear and said: "What time have you? My watch has stopped." The father drew out his watch and was half through giving him the time when he looked around and saw that he was standing alone and that the son was nowhere to be seen. He was bewildered and looked like the man from beneath whose coat collar the magician has just extracted a live goose. Presently the son stepped forth from the pillar where he had been in hiding, but it required many explanations to restore the old gentleman's serenity.

William II's Toad Talisman.

The house of Hohenzollern possesses a family talisman. Since the time of the Elector John Cicero, who flourished toward the end of the fifteenth century, each ruler has, when possible before dissolution, handed to his successor a sealed packet. This contains a ring in which is set a black stone said to have been dropped by a huge toad on the coverlet of a princess of the family just as she had given birth to a son. Frederick the Great found the ring in an envelope, which also inclosed a memorandum written by Frederick I, stating its value and its mode of transmission. Schneider, the librarian of William I, declares that he saw the packet handed by Geilling, the treasurer, to his royal master on accession, and further asserts that he read his account of the talisman to the emperor, who fully confirmed it.—St. James Gazette.

THE MURDER OF A WIFE.

ONE night, just as it was growing dusk and the lengthening shadows brought weird memories to me, I was disturbed by the rattling of a cab which stopped at the door with a loud "Whoa" from the driver and a pull that brought the horse on its haunches.

A man sprung out of the cab, and, hastily running up the steps, pulled frantically at the door bell. Although it was nearly dark I had time to distinguish the features of one of the leading lawyers of the city.

As my servant showed him into the front parlor, by the window of which I was sitting, he came forward, and, grasping me by both hands, said: "Mr. Martinot, we need no introduction; we both know each other professionally so well that a personal acquaintance is unnecessary."

I motioned him to a chair. "I will be seated," said he, "but only long enough for you to get ready to go with me. I want you to go to the Tombs. My client, in whose behalf I have called to see you, is there. He is in the shadow of the gallows. The noose is around his neck."

It is no unusual thing for me to be called by a professional man, and therefore I gave no thought to the case as we were rattling through the streets, but the impatience of the lawyer was such that he would not allow the cabman to slacken, even upon the slippery pavements. We were nearly there before he mentioned the case. He seemed unable to talk from nervousness. When the shadow of the Tombs fell upon the cab he turned to me and said:

"I can tell you only one thing about the case; my client is innocent. That is absolute. In his confession to me he could explain nothing; he only knows that he is innocent."

With this brief prelude I followed my guide up the stairs leading to the Tombs and into the somber gallery that runs along murderers' row. In the last cell, surrounded by not more than ten square feet of space, sat my man. He occupied a wooden chair, and when the turnkey unlocked the door he gave no sign excepting to bury his head deeper in his hands and groan.

At a glance I saw that he was a gentleman. He was a man in the prime of life, not over 40, well dressed, clean-shaven and handsome. This I saw in spite of the dark gloom upon his countenance, for never in my life had I seen such abject despair shown in the face of a human being.

At the sound of the lawyer's voice he lifted up his head, and at the mention of my name a ray of hope seemed to come across his countenance. He rose, shook hands with us both, and beckoned us to seats on his rude cot.

"Now," said the lawyer, leaning back and leaving us face to face together, "tell Mr. Martinot everything that happened that night and conceal nothing from him. Tell him just as you have told me."

Looking me straight in the eye and beginning at the very beginning, Franklin Jarvis told me his story:

"I am a manufacturer of dress goods," said he. "My business carries me down into Barclay street and the lower quarters of the town, and on that account I rise early every morning. For many years my wife has not breakfasted with me.

"We were married fifteen years ago and our story is an old one. We married in poverty and were happy. We grew to wealth and were indifferent. When fortune began to smile upon us my wife became ambitious and longed to shine in the social set of which we had read only a little and in gilded paragraphs.

"I opposed her and we quarreled, sometimes gently, but more often bitterly. Our words at times rose high, and when, as on a recent occasion, she showed great extravagance in her attempts to get into high circles, I would leave the house and not return for a week at a time. Thus it grew steadily on for the last five years, getting worse and worse.

"I will tell you now," said he, hesitating and half apologetically, "that for the last five years, since our trouble began, I have been employing my spare time in a little amusement which I have very rigidly kept secret from my friends. I have been writing stories. During these periods when my wife and I were estranged and neither of us would humble ourselves enough to make the first approaches, I have withdrawn from home, and, taking up my quarters in a hotel, have amused myself evenings writing fiction. This has been my pastime, as other men drive horses or seek the billiard table. My stories have been in print and doubtless you, Mr. Martinot, have read many of them under an assumed name. My wife knew of my little pastime and ridiculed it. When I wrote at home I could only do it in the still hours of the night when she was asleep.

"Last Wednesday morning at the breakfast table my wife, who had been extravagant of late, brought up the subject of a residence uptown. She wanted to be opposite Central Park and to ride with the swells of Fifth avenue. I opposed her and she retorted sharply.

"'You will regret this,' I said as I rose from the table. 'You may regret it sooner than you think. By God,' I cried, as the memory of the things she had said swept over me anew, 'I wish I could go away and never see your face again.'

"Of course I was sorry for the words as soon as I had said them, and during the day I squared matters with my conscience by sending a basket of flowers to her. I even notified a real estate manager that I was in the market for an uptown residence.

"I was detained that night at my office, and when I reached home the church clock opposite was tolling the hour of 11. I went softly in at the front door, and knowing that my wife would be asleep at that hour I walked through the long hall to a little study situated at the rear end of the hall. Here stood a small writing desk, and here I knew I could be alone for an hour to quiet my mind from the business events of the day and to indulge in my favorite recreation of story writing.

"A plot had come to my mind as I came uptown in the cars, and I resolved to write it while it was fresh. A flattering letter from a publisher who had accepted my latest story made me resolve to supply him with another as soon as possible.

"This time my wife shall know of my work and be proud of it. I will enter society and court the litterati, while she enjoys herself with the butterflies,' I said to myself, smiling, as I dipped my pen in the ink.

"The plot of my story was a singular one. It was the 'Murder of a Wife.'

"With accuracy I went into each startling detail, and as I wrote down the bloodthirsty words I saw that my anger for my wife was melting away, even as the beauty of the story grew underneath my fingers. When I had finished I saw that I had achieved what would be the greatest work of my life, and that honors would come to me from the public who would read my story.

"When I had laid down my pen I sighed a sigh of relief.

"'I could not do that again for $1,000,' I said aloud. 'No,' I repeated, as I walked through the hall, still intent with the plot, 'no, I could not do that again for $10,000.'

"'Did you speak, sir?' inquired a woman's voice.

"'Who is that?' I asked.

"'It is I—Ellen, the cook. I heard somebody walking around, sir, and I came to see who it was.'

"'All right, Ellen,' I said; 'it is I. Go back to bed.' And Ellen, who sleeps in the basement, went back down the basement stairs.

Bounding up the staircase, I threw open the door of my wife's room and stepped inside. A moment later I was pulling the bell frantically and shouting for help.

"There upon the edge of the bed lay my wife, with the blood dripping from her head and heart. She was uncovered, with one arm hanging to the floor. Her countenance was fearfully distorted. She had been cruelly murdered—stabbed in the head and heart. Stabbed to death by the hand of a midnight assassin.

"In a moment the room was filled with frightened servants and I was sending them in every direction—for physicians, policemen, neighbors.

"But there was nothing to be done. She was dead. That much we all saw at a glance. Her head was slashed almost beyond recognition and the hand that had done it was a desperate one.

"I was too dazed that night to consider. But the next day when the inquest was held I saw the awkward position in which I was placed. The coroner, in his search of the premises, came upon the manuscripts lying upon the little table in my writing-room and there, word for word, lay before him the act description of the murder of my wife, just as it was, in my manuscript. If I had killed her before writing I could not have written down a more accurate account of the details.

"The rest you know. My arrest, imprisonment and impending trial fill the newspapers. I am a doomed man. Nothing on earth can save me! The testimony of Ellen alone would convict me. No chain of circumstantial evidence was ever more closely entwined around an unfortunate wretch like me."

I must confess that when I came out of the Tombs that night I was puzzled. The awfulness of the story and the certainty of conviction were all that I could bring to mind.

As we stepped down the stone steps the clock in the Tombs was tolling 11.

"Drive me to the home of Franklin Jarvis," I said to the lawyer. "Let me in the front door and leave me. Come back for me in one hour."

I hardly knew what I intended to do, although my mind was full of vague suggestions. As the front door of the fated house closed between me and the street a shiver ran over me in spite of my many experiences and I walked softly the full length of the hall and seated myself in the little writing room.

Taking up pen and ink, I took the blank sheets of paper before me and began to write as though I were living the night of the murder over again. As I wrote I turned and laid the sheets one by one upon a small Cairo stand back of me, which had evidently been used for that purpose, for there were blotters upon it.

Scarcely had I written a page when I thought I heard behind me a stealthy step. On the second page I heard it again. This time there were whispers. I listened and heard a voice say, "For the love of God, can it be he?"

I sprang to my feet and turned around.

A loud shriek rose to the ceiling and out upon the hall floor there fell a heavy weight. It was a man and over him bent a woman.

"You scared him almost to death, sir," said she. "I told him that it was only one of them detectives that they are always sending here, but the back of your head looked so much like master's that it scared him most to death."

"Why should that scare him?" I asked.

"Sure sir, I don't know, but lately he has been like, like——"

"I HEARD A VOICE SAY: 'FOR THE LOVE OF GOD, CAN IT BE HE?'"

At this moment the man opened his eyes.

"Forgive me, forgive me," he cried. "I have dreamed of it day and night, forgive——"

"I will forgive you nothing," said I, "until you confess how your curiosity made you creep up behind your master that night and read what he was writing. Confess how you went upstairs and killed your mistress and robbed her of her jewels; confess how you hid after the others were called and pretended to be asleep; and confess how you have allowed an innocent man to suffer for your crime."

Truly frightened now, the wretch told how he overheard the quarrel on the morning and how he had planned the murder of his mistress. And how and by what dastardly means he had found the very description of the murder before his eyes and had followed it out with awful correctness.—Chicago Chronicle.

Aluminum Cooking Utensils.

Recent experiments show that aluminum is a safe metal for cooking utensils. Some slight corrosion takes place, but it soon ceases, as an insoluble coating seems to form on the metal, which protects it. This is analogous to protective deposits on iron boiler plates and on lead water-pipes, which are often produced by water containing salts. It is announced that nearly all the utensils carried by soldiers of the French army on the march will be made hereafter of aluminum.

Strange Chinese Law.

If a Chinese dies while being tried for murder, the very fact of his dying is taken as evidence of his guilt. He has departed, but somebody must suffer, and his eldest son, if he has one, is sent to prison for a year. If he has no son, then his father or brother gets a flogging. It's all in the family, and justice must be administered.

Capital and Labor.—The obligation upon capital to preserve the rights of labor is higher and graver than any obligation resting upon labor to concern itself about the rights of capital.—Rev. S. F. Hershey, Presbyterian, Boston, Massachusetts.

Duels.—Men used to settle all their private differences by private combat. We boast that we have done away with settling things by duels. But we have not got so far along that we don't boast of our war spirit.—Rev. William Anderson, Methodist, New York City.

The Next World.—Light and joy are not shut up to the next world. Its heavenly camp fires send beams to earth. The two worlds are not so far apart. The call to life reaches us. We need the fellowship of the higher to guide us in the lower.—Rev. J. E. Bushnell, Presbyterian, New York City.

Business and Religion.—It is the serious-minded, thoughtful men who retire from the noise and excitement of the market and exchange who find religion precious. Not while the thoughts are given over to business or society does one come upon the "treasure hid in a field."—Rev. H. Jenkins, Presbyterian, Kansas City, Mo.

The Laboring Classes.—Give the laboring classes habitable homes, comfortable clothing, healthy and sufficient food and leisure enough to increase their store of knowledge and recreate their minds and bodies, and you take away nearly all the grounds for just complaint and discontent.—Rev. Wm. Byrne, Catholic, Boston, Mass.

Materialism.—Materialism is what all the people, high and low, need to be saved from—the materialism which makes the good of life consist in getting things and not in being men and women, made not to strive against one another, and prey upon one another, but to help and serve one another.—Rev. Dr. Gladden, Congregationalist, Columbus, Ohio.

Indifference.—There is entirely too much worldliness and indifference in our churches to-day. Church members do just as sinners do. They take part in worldly pleasures and sins. God will not prosper any church that is not trying to save souls, and to bring the world into a saving knowledge of Christ as a Redeemer.—Rev. P. C. Curnick, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Who Drank the First Cup of Coffee?

In the Bibliotheque Nationale there is a manuscript (near the end of the sixteenth century), written by an Arab, Abdelcader, who declares that coffee was drunk for the first time in Arabia in the middle of the fifteenth century. Others think that certain remarks in Persian writings imply that coffee was used in Persia as early as the ninth century, but most authors dispute these texts. It is commonly supposed that the use of coffee in its earliest home, Abyssinia, and in its second home, Arabia, is only five to six centuries old.

A legend says that the Angel Gabriel once, when Mohammed was ill, brought him a cup of coffee. Another legend says that a Mohammedan monk discovered that his goats became very lively and full of fun after they had eaten the fruit of the coffee tree. This observation caused him to make the first cup of coffee. His dervishes enjoyed the coffee, and ever afterward drank it at night to produce wakefulness when they kept vigils. Cautious historians laugh at these traditions and prefer to stand by Abdelcader's manuscript. This writer mentions an Arab, Gemaleddin, a judge in Aden, who, while traveling to Persia, or, as historians correct the manuscript, to Abyssinia, saw people use coffee as medicine. He used it and was cured of a sickness. Later, becoming a monk, he taught his brethren the use of coffee. It was, then, in Aden that coffee-drinking originated. The fakirs even made coffee-drinking compulsory upon their neophytes. Public coffee-houses originated in Aden, and very early in history.—Saturday Evening Post.

A Picture of Zola.

This is how Zola is described by Stuart Henry in "Hours With Famous Parisians:" A business man, no emotion, no ideals, no imagination, no poetry, in his personal intercourse. He does not try to win or entertain you. He takes no personal interest in you and does not expect you to take any personal interest in him. He talks frankly and freely about everything, but in a secular way. He makes life seem to you merely a commercial career. Fiction for him is editions of 100,000 francs a year. His magisterial and magnificent panoramas of descriptions, unequaled for their kind, are all measured off in his mind as so many rods of printed matter at so much a rod. No personal magnetism, no sentiment, no perfume, no rose colors. Life has been for him a blunt, rude, brutish thing. He has conquered merely because he has worked harder than any one else. With him naturalistic literature succeeds only by the sweat of the brow. What loins of strength nevertheless! What Titanic capacities to achieve! He towers over all his Parisian contemporaries, as Victor Hugo towered over his epoch.

The Elephant Corps.

An English newspaper, in an article on the Siamese army, says: "In one respect the Siamese army is superior to every other, and that is in its elephant corps. Eight hundred of these animals, which are stronger, though smaller, than those of India, are organized into a special corps, commanded by a retired Anglo-Indian officer, and their heads, trunks and other vulnerable parts are protected against bullets by india rubber armor."

A Costly Dish.

"Oh, mamma, do Christians eat preachers just like the cannibals do?"

"Why, no, my child. What put that notion into your head?"

"I heard Mrs. Deekon say this morning that she was going to have her minister for lunch."—Brooklyn Life.

FABULOUS WEALTH.

The "incalculable mineral wealth" of newly found mining regions largely run by syndicates and promoted by transportation companies is in too many instances really a fable. The products of industry in legitimate fields of enterprise nearer home are far surer and promise more stable rewards. No one will go unrewarded in the matter of improved health who uses regularly Hostetter's Stomach Bitters for malaria, dyspepsia, constipation, biliousness, &c.

"But isn't the game of golf rather tiresome? You have to cover a great deal of ground." "Yes; but one doesn't mind that—his mind is so taken up with trying to think of the dialect."

A LETTER TO WOMEN.

A few words from Mrs. Smith, of Philadelphia, will certainly corroborate the claim that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is woman's ever reliable friend.

"I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly.

"For nine weeks I was in bed suffering with inflammation and congestion of the ovaries. I had a discharge all the time. When lying down all the time, I felt quite comfortable; but as soon as I would put my feet on the floor, the pains would come back.

"Every one thought it was impossible for me to get well. I was paying $1 per day for doctor's visits and 75 cents a day for medicine. I made up my mind to try Mrs. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has effected a complete cure for me, and I have all the faith in the world in it. What a blessing to woman it is!"—MRS. JENNIE L. SMITH, No. 324 Kauffman St., Philadelphia, Pa.

VIEWS IN CHICKAMAUGA PARK, WHERE 14,000 UNION SOLDIERS DIED.

CHICKAMAUGA PARK.

IF there is anything of inspiration in the association of ideas, any added patriotism and courage to be gained by daily life on a field where 14,000 Union soldiers died in the hardest fought, most magnificent and thrilling series of battles in the civil war, the regulars, national guardsmen and volunteers who encamp in the Chickamauga Park should be able to fight like fiends incarnate. Tenting again on the old camp ground, in the midst of one of the most beautiful bits of country which God has given to this fairest of lands, it is hard to believe that war and death were within a few hours' ride by rail.

As, standing on Lookout Mountain, the eye sweeps over the glorious view below, Finch's prophecy rushes to mind—

No more shall the war cry sever,
Or the winding rivers be red.

No more, indeed, as to a divided nation, and foreign complications were then unthought of. Where battle lines of 140,000 men surged thirty-five years ago, 50,000 soldiers of the redeemed republic awaited the word which sends them forth to strike the shackles from another race. The heroism of their fathers is an open book to these soldiers of to-day.

DEDICATION SEPT. 19, 1895.

Little more than two short years ago the Park was dedicated with imposing ceremonies, after the nation had spent nearly a million dollars on it, and various States almost half a million more, New York State's share being $81,000. The Governor of Ohio, now the President of the United States, was there. All thought then that the park evermore was dedicated to peace. Western men, almost entirely, represented the Union in the six battles fought within the park. Ohio has more than fifty monuments on the fields, and Illinois nearly 100. Twenty-nine States had regiments in these battles, and each one of these States either has put up monuments to mark the position of her troops or will erec' them soon. The General Governmen' has remembered in similar manner the position of the regular regiments. Eight generals who fell on both sides are commemorated by mounds of shells and solid shot. Where batteries were posted are 300 or 400 mounted cannon, of the pattern used in the war. Half a dozen steel towers seventy feet high rear their slender forms from commanding positions on the fields, and afford to the visitors comprehensive views.

The park boundaries inclose about fifteen square miles, not including the fine roads or approaches. The largest part of the park is the battlefield of Chickamauga, in Georgia, and the next largest part takes in Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Orchard Knob, near Chattanooga, in Tennessee. Nearly fifty miles of roads improved by the General Government connect the different sections of the park. These are the same roads which the soldiers of the two armies used to reach the scene of battle. All roads which have been opened since the war have been closed, and those in use then which since had been closed were opened by the park commission. Land which was covered with trees in war days and since had been cleared was planted with saplings. Every effort has been made to put the park in its war time condition.

To thousands of persons who never have been there, including many old soldiers who fought on other fields, the cyclorama of the battles of Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain which has been on exhibition in various cities has given a good idea of the country and the battle scenes.

It was at Chickamauga, where Thomas stood "like a rock," that Garfield distinguished himself. He was chief of staff to Rosecrans, and was sent by that general to warn Thomas that Longstreet, with his 70,000 men, was marching to turn the right flank of Thomas' army. Garfield started off with a captain and two orderlies. They ran into an ambush, the captain was wounded, the two orderlies killed and Garfield was the only one left to go on with the all-important message. This was the tightest of all tight places that Garfield had ever been in. He jammed his lips together, muttered "Now is your time, be a man, Jim Garfield," and spurred ahead in a zig-zag course across the field to avoid the bullets. His horse, a fine animal, was struck, but it was only a flesh wound, and it was like another dig of the rowels. Garfield reached Col. McCook, got a new horse and made a fresh start over a fire-swept field. This mount, too, was hit, but the young chief of staff remained unhurt. Just as he got by Thomas' side the animal gave one bound and fell dead. Garfield delivered the message and Thomas' army was saved. Eighteen years from that day Garfield, the President, lay dead in the cottage at Elberon. The bullets of an assassin had done what the bullets of the Confederates could not do.

The month before Chickamauga was fought the battle of Wauhatchie, a little to the west of Chattanooga. Gen. Geary, who commanded the division which made this fight, had a son, who, at the age of 17, had enlisted at the beginning of the war, and at this time was a lieutenant of artillery. Just as Geary was about to lead the charge, his boy fell dead before his eyes, hit by a bullet fair in the forehead. The father dismounted, kissed the warm body, hardly still from the agonies of death, then sprang to his horse and led his men to the attack. The whole war does not furnish a parallel to this instance of fortitude.

Among those who fell at Chickamauga was the Union General William H. Lytle. His close friend was Lieutenant Richard Realf, an Englishman of rare poetic powers, who killed himself in California only a few years ago. The two friends often wrote verses together, and then submitted them to each other for criticism. On the night before Chickamauga they were engaged in this manner. Lytle had written part of the poem beginning, "I am dying, Egypt, dying," when Lytle suddenly turned to Realf.

"I shall never live to finish that," he said.

"Nonsense," replied Realf, "you'll live to write volumes of that sort of stuff."

"No," said Lytle, gravely. "As I was talking to you a minute ago I saw the green hills of Ohio as they looked when I stood among them. They began to recede from me in a weird way, and as they disappeared the conviction flashed through me like lightning that I should never see them again."

Realf laughed at him, but after a while became so filled with unnatural fear that he begged him to finish the verses. Before daybreak Lytle woke his friend and read to him the completed poem. Then, without another word, Lytle put it in his breast pocket. At dawn came the call to arms, and the friends separated. When next Realf saw the General, Lytle was among the slain. Remembering what the General had done with the poem, Realf searched the pocket and found it, and sent it to the General's friends.

A merrier incident was the reply Rosecrans returned to a soldier, who expressed before Chickamauga his firm conviction that the army was not well fed, which was the fact. The provision trains were called by the soldiers the "cracker line." One day as Rosecrans was riding through the camps a soldier called out to him within hearing of all the others:

"More crackers and less review."

Rosy turned in his saddle.

"A lean dog for a long race," was his quick reply.

In the two months that elapsed from Chickamauga to the battle of Chattanooga occurred the incident which resulted later in giving the badge to one of the army corps, the Fifteenth. Some of the men who had been with Hooker at Chancellorsville and shared in the defeat and retreat were telling of the various corps badges, and asked an Irishman of the Fifteenth corps what his badge was.

"Badge? Phat's that?" asked the Irishman.

"Why some distinguishing mark by which each corps can be told from the rest. For instance, one of the corps at Chancellorsville had the moon, or a crescent. Another had a star, and so on."

"Ah, yes, I see," said the Irishman. "Begorra, ye needed the moon and the stars to show ye the way across the Rappahannock. Here's our badge," slapping his cartridge box. "Forty rounds."

The reply was so apt that Logan, upon hearing of it, adopted the cartridge box, with the figures 40 on it, as the badge of the Fifteenth Corps.

After the disaster at Chickamauga, Grant came down and took command. In the two months' wait the pickets of the two armies got into quite friendly relations. They exchanged greetings, and sometimes swapped tobacco across the lines. One day Grant rode down to the Union pickets. One of the guard saw him and, according to the military custom, called out:

"Turn out the guard for the commanding general."

"Never mind the guard," returned the General, not caring for any fuss and anxious to spare his men any trouble. Just across the little creek were the pickets of the Johnnies.

"Turn out the guard for the commanding general, Gen. Grant," some Johnny called out. Out came the guard and presented arms. Grant returned the salute as he would one from his own men. Never in the war was this extraordinary scene duplicated.

GLORIOUS VICTORIES.

On Nov. 23 came the battle of Orchard Knob, on the 24th Lookout Mountain and on the next day Missionary Ridge. Every school boy and girl knows about these last two battles. Lookout Mountain is famed in song and story as the Battle Above the Clouds. The part of the Union army which was not included in the assaulting column were on the plains below, cheering as men never cheered before. All the bands in the army were massed down there playing as the attack was made. They say bands never are taken into battle. As a rule this is so, and whenever there is an exception it is a thing to be remembered to the life to come. The next morning, when the peak of Lookout was gained and a squad advanced with the Stars and Stripes, planting the staff on the highest point, the enthusiasm below was unbounded and contributed to the still more thrilling event of that day.

For the storming of Missionary Ridge was not on Grant's program. Grant, watching the battle on Orchard Knob, turned to Thomas, and said, almost angrily.

"Thomas, who ordered those men up the ridge?"

"I don't know," replied Thomas, in his usual deliberate manner. "I did not."

"Did you order them up?" Grant asked Gen. Gordon Granger.

"No," said Granger, "they started up without orders. When those fellows get started all hell can't stop them."

"Some one will suffer if it doesn't turn out well," was all the comment Grant made. But everything turned out well, and Missionary Ridge was ours.

Benjamin F. Taylor, the war correspondent, whose son was in the fight as a soldier, saw and reported the battles. Theodore R. Davis, one of Harpers' artists, also was there for his paper. And so the story of those November days comes down to us from the pencils of those specially gifted in description as well as from the drier official reports.

TOUGH, BUT HAS A HEART.

One Touch of Life in the Crowded Streets of a City.

He was an every-day tough, bull-necked, square-jawed, red of face and with his hair cropped short in the fashion that rules at Sing Sing and is admired of Battle Row. Any one could have told it at a glance. The bruised and wrathful face of the policeman who brought him to Mulberry street to be "stood up" before the detectives in the hope that there might be something against him to aggravate the offense of beating an officer with his own club bore witness to it. It told a familiar story. The prisoner's gang had started a fight on the avenue, probably with a scheme of ultimate robbery in view, and the police had come upon it unexpectedly. The rest had got away with an assortment of promiscuous bruises. The "Kid" stood his ground and went down with two "cops" on top of him, after a valiant battle, in which he had performed the feat that entitled him to honorable mention henceforth in the felonious annals of the gang. There was no surrender in his sullen look as he stood before the desk, his hard face disfigured further by a streak of half-dried blood, reminiscent of the night's encounter. The fight had gone against him—that was all right. There was a time for getting square. Till then he was man enough to take his medicine; let them do their wrost.

It was there to read, plain as could be. In his set jaws and dogged bearing as he came out, numbered now and indexed in the rogue's gallery, and started for the police court between two officers. It chanced that I was going the same way, and joined company. Besides, I have certain theories concerning toughs which my friend, the sergeant, says are rot, and I was not averse to testing them on the kid.

But the kid was a bad subject. He replied to my friendly advances with a muttered curse, or not at all, and upset all my notions in the most reckless way. Conversation had ceased before we were half way across to Broadway. He "wanted no guff," and I left him to his meditations respecting his defenseless state. At Broadway there was a jam of trucks, and we stopped at the corner to wait for an opening.

It all happened so quickly that only a confused picture of it is in my mind till this day. A sudden start, a leap, and a warning cry, and the kid had wrenched himself loose. He was free. I was dimly conscious of a rush of blue and brass; and then I saw—the whole street saw—a child, a toddling baby, in the middle of the railroad track right in front of the coming car. It reached out its tiny hand toward the madly clanging bell and crowed. A scream rose wild and piercing above the tumult; men struggled with a frantic woman on the curb, and turned their heads away——

And then there stood the kid, with the child in his arms, unhurt. I see him now, as he set it down gently as any woman, trying, with lingering touch, to unclasp the grip of the baby hand upon his rough finger. I see the hard look coming back into his face as the policeman, red and out of breath, twisted the nipper on his wrist, with a half uncertain aside to me: "Them toughs there ain't no depending on nohow." Sullen, defiant, planning vengeance, I see him led away to jail. Ruffian and thief! The police blotter said so.

Shakspeare Strangled by Electricity

Electricity and spiritualism do not make a good combination. An ingenious attempt to utilize them conjointly nearly gained for its contriver the honor of a coroner's inquest all to himself. A medium who made a specialty of luminous apparitions gave a seance on Monday night at the house of a scientific man, and successfully reproduced from his recess in a darkened room the luminous visions of various deceased personages.

While Shakspeare was on view the awe-stricken audience were surprised to hear a gasping, gurgling noise proceeding from his throat, while the head swayed to and fro as if in pain. A gentleman rushed forward just in time to save the great poet from suffocation by pulling out of his thorax a miniature electric lamp, connected by a slender wire to a small battery underneath his coat. On the principle of the schoolboy's salamander trick of illuminating the face by putting a lighted match in the mouth, the medium caused a faint spiritualistic glow, enough to satisfy wonder-seekers, to suffuse his countenance by inserting, before his hands were tied to insure confidence, the tiny electric lamp behind his teeth. Unfortunately in this case the article slipped too far down, and as the medium's bound hands prevented him pulling it up again the unfortunate man might have been choked by an incandescent light.—London Telegraph.

Mrs. Greene—My husband is such a thoughtful man! He always goes down into the basement kitchen to smoke. Mrs. Gray—And lets the smoke come upstairs into the dining-room through the dumb waiter. Mrs. Greene—Yes, but that's because he is absent-minded, poor man. That has nothing to do with his thoughtfulness, you know.—Boston Transcript.

Attorney—You say you had called to see Miss Billings and was at the house at the time the burglary was committed? Witness—Yes, sir. Attorney—Then how did it happen that when the prisoner dashed into the room and assaulted you, you leaped through the window and went home, making no attempt to defend the lady or give the alarm? Witness—I thought it was her father.—Life.

"My friend," said the kindly old gentleman who likes to make acquaintances while traveling, "you should follow my example. I strive to learn something new every day." "No," was the answer of the quiet young man; "that may do in your line of business; but if you were doing a vaudeville turn with me, you'd realize that audiences seem disappointed if they don't get what they have been taught to expect."—Washington Star.

Mrs. Fadde (faith curist)—How is your grandfather this morning, Bridget? Bridget—He still has the rheumatics mighty bad, mum. Mrs. Fadde—You mean he thinks he has the rheumatism. There is no such thing as rheumatism. Bridget—Yes, mum. A few days later: Mrs. Fadde—And does your grandfather still persist in his delusion that he has the rheumatism? Bridget—No, mum; the poor man thinks now thot he is dead. We buried um yisterday.—Indianapolis Journal.

A YOUNG WOMAN'S RUSE.

Led to an Innocent Display of Her Father's Artillery.

Col. I. N. Walker is the authority for story which, as he says, is a very proper one for the parlor and one which contains several suggestions of value to young ladies who may occasionally find themselves in a position requiring the use of diplomacy and tact. This story avers that in a certain place not very far away, and at a time not very long ago, there was a young man who came from a distant city on a visit to one of his friends, another young man who stood high in the esteem of the community. The visiting youth was seriously afflicted with the ambition of meeting some nice young lady of culture and refinement who might be matrimonially inclined, and when his accommodating friend told him of a very handsome maiden of his acquaintance his soul was fired with ardor and he resolved to pursue his suit with energy. This laudable purpose was strengthened perceptibly by an incidental recital on the part of his friend of the old gentleman's worldly possessions, and the young man was on tenter-hooks until he obtained an introduction. The introduction obtained, he lost no time, but called the next evening. The events of that memorable evening abide with him to the present day.

It seems the pair were alone in the parlor for something like half an hour when the ardent youth threw discretion to the wind and essayed a feat of osculation that was indignantly resented. Whether he received a blow of the hand upon his features is a mere matter of speculation, but it was quite evident that there was some stamping of a dainty foot and a darting of fire from indignant eyes, for the young man was given thoroughly to understand that if he did it again the paternal parent would be informed. But the thrust fell on heedless ears, for no sooner was it made than the bold suitor once more attempted his trick. Then war ensued instanter. Out of the room swept the young lady and the young man was left to cogitate, but only for a brief space.

In the next room was the paternal parent, a man who loved sporting above almost everything else, and when his daughter entered he was examining a double-barreled shotgun in a fond and doting manner. Said his daughter to him: "Pa, there is a young man in the parlor who, like yourself, is much interested in hunting. I wish you would meet him. You might take your new gun in with you, for I know he would greatly admire the pattern." Nothing could suit the old gentleman better than this, so he marched into the parlor expecting to receive the enthusiastic praises of a true sport. But in this expectation he was doomed to sad disappointment. The young man saw him coming and saw the gun also. Exit by the door was impossible and the window offered the only hope for escape, so out he jumped with all his might and down the street went flying as fast as his aroused fears for life could make him. The old gentleman gazed on this strange scene with bewilderment, but his daughter had obtained a point of vantage where she gloried recklessly in the success of her ingenious contriving.—Indianapolis Journal.

Du Maurier's Story of His Blindness.

I went to Antwerp, where there is a famous school of painting, and where I had no less a person than Mr. Alma-Tadema as a fellow student. It was all delightful, but misfortune befell me, and I lost the sight of an eye—perhaps it was the eye with which I used to do the funny caricatures; it was a very good eye, much the better of the two, and the other has not improved by having to do a double share of the work. Moreover, certain physical disabilities that I have the misfortune to labor under make it difficult for me to study and sketch the lusty things in the open air and sunshine. My sight, besides being defective in many ways, is so sensitive that I cannot face the common light of day without glasses thickly rimmed with wire gauze, so that sketching out-of-doors is often to me difficult and distressing.

I mention this infirmity not as an excuse for my shortcomings and failures—for them there is no excuse—but as a reason why I have abstained from the treatment of so much that is so popular, delightful and exhilarating in English country life and sports.—Harper's Magazine.

His Salary.

The Washington Post tells of a bright boy, one of the pages in the Senate at Washington, who was at one of the Senate entrances when a lady approached with a visiting card in her hand.

"Will you hand this to Senator Blank," she said.

"I cannot," replied the boy; "all cards must be taken to the east lobby."

The woman was inclined to be angry, and went away muttering. Then a thought struck her, and taking out her pocket-book she found a 25-cent piece. With it in her hand she went back to the boy.

"Here, my lad," she said, in a coaxing tone, "here is a quarter to take my card in."

"Madam," said the boy, without a moment's hesitation, "I am paid a larger salary than that to keep cards out."

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, JUNE 24 1898

Review: In this paper in its issue of May 21 last, we drew attention to the improved conditions of the market for silver. The improvement then noted has continued, and silver looks better and brighter today than it has for many years. The present increased demand for the metal by the Spanish government is, in a measure, responsible for this, but that is not the only reason for the advance in the price of silver, and for the hopes now entertained that it will be made use of as a money circulating medium to a greater extent than it has in the past.

In addition to these causes the shipments of silver from London to eastern countries show large increases and they are very much larger than they were a year ago. The published returns of the British Board of Trade for the four months ending April 30, 1898, throw additional light on this most interesting subject. During that period there was sent to China from London, silver to the value of $1,556,465, as against only $199,810 sent there during the corresponding period of last year. To the British East Indies there was sent from London, during the same period, silver to the value of $13,705,880 as against only $10,499,870 during the corresponding period of last year. By this it is seen that these two countries have alone taken during the first four months of this year $4,562,665 more of silver than they did during the first four months of last year. Silver is gaining strength.

Costly experience gained by the War and Navy departments during the Civil war has led to the creation at Washington of what is probably the most elaborate system of records of military and naval service ever established by any nation in the world. Although the current war will unquestionably add largely to the pension list, it will be impossible to renew at any future time the multiform and scandalous devices by which persons not entitled to Government bounty have been borne upon the pension roll. Our enormously exaggerated list of pensioners of the Civil War, which shows no signs of decreasing from year to year, denotes and embodies an error into which the Government could not fall a second time. There is not the slightest apprehension at this time in the Record and Pension Division of the War Department that any improper or unjust claims will get through the Pension Office on account of military operations in the war with Spain. As to the navy, the system of hospital records there is so thorough that they practically constitute a complete history of every case of illness or of injury to men while afloat. These are preserved in the Surgeon General's office and may be referred to at any time.

The International Mining Congress, which will meet in second annual session in Salt Lake City July 6-9, is attracting increased attention as the time near, and the prospect of a great attendance grows daily. The secretary has received official notice of the election of over 1000 delegates from six States and 188 cities, and many more will be reported. Canadian province, Mexico and some South American republics will be among the foreign countries represented. California will send a large delegation. Delegates have been named by Governor Budd, the California Miner's Association and several of the ming counties. Several thousand dollars have been raised at Salt Lake City for the entertainment of the convention, and there vill be many social features and excursions to make the gathering more enjoyable. A large number of legislative and practical questions will be acted upon and the project of establishing a cabinet department of mines and mining will be givin all the impetus possible.

Before long ships will begin to arrive from Alaska, and will doubtless bring down considerable quantities of gold—perhaps so much as to cause a repetition of the craze of last year, which has now neorly died out. No one doubts there are vast quantities of gold in Alaska, but the hardships entailed in attempting to secure it make the game hardly worth the candle.

The amount of gold received at San Francisco from Australia since August 10 last till date is $22,500,000. This breaks all previous records. The coins have been reminted and most of the newly-coined gold has been shipped directly to New York, and the remainder will follow very soon.

WAR NEWS.

The situation remains practically unchanged from last week. General Shafter has landed near Santiago with 15,000 troops, and has established a base of supplies. No news has been received from Manila regarding the arrival of our transports.

Santiago is on the verge of starvation, and must soon capitulate. Spanish soldiers are on half rations, flour is quoted at 50c per pound, and even dog meat is in demand at high prices.

Gen. Blanco at Havana has notified the blockading fleet that he will hereafter recognize no flag of truce, but that all vessels approaching within six miles range will be fired on.

The Spanish refuse to exchange Lieut. ... for prisoners held by the U. S.

Porto Rico will probably be invaded next month.

Honolulu papers publish a sensational article about an attempt to blow up the transport Pekin by a Spaniard who had enlisted in the American army.

The powder works near Cincinnati were blown up Sunday by two men, one of whom was badly injured.

At the recent elections in Germany the Socialists cast over two million votes, and elected 33 members of the Reichstag, nearly doubling their vote of two years ago.

A French agriculturist has grafted tomatoes upon potatoes, with the result that his plant produces potatoes underground and tomatoes above.

It is estimated that California and Colorado will produce over $20,000,000 in gold each this year.

CURTAIN RAISERS.

Ben Stevens will manage "The Bride Elect" next season. Klaw and Erlanger are highly interested in its production.

Agnes Sorma plays a barefoot role in "The Children of the King." Her acting does not depend on a display of high heels.

It is reported that Marie Shortwell and John E. Kelterd will come out as joint stars next season, appearing in a new romantic play.

Messrs. Perley and Rankin have decided to have "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush" revived during the coming summer. The London scene will be omitted.

According to Sir Henry Irving, the theater and music halls of the metropolis give employment to 100,000 people and represent a capital of £3,000,000.

Chaminade in her forthcoming visit to America is to be accompanied by Ward Stephen, a New York pianist, known to the European public as Varri Stefanski.

Stuart Robson has two new plays under consideration. One is by Bronson Howard, the author of "The Henrietta," and the other is the work of Augustus Thomas.

Grant Richards announces the publication of a poetical drama by the late Louisa Shore, entitled "Hannibal," a book which in its day attracted a considerable amount of attention.

The London papers seem to agree pretty unanimously that "The Conquerors" is neither decent nor artistic. The Telegraph says that in the dialogue Mr. Potter achieved "absolute dullness."

Mme. Patti has gained much in health by her prolonged rest, and her voice is also said to have been benefited. She will be heard in London this month for the first time since her recent bereavement.

Mark Twain, like Mr. Barrie and one or two other novelists, has determined to go in for writing for the stage; but, unlike Mr. Barrie, it is not his own work he intends to adapt for theatrical representation, but that of other writers.

It is understood that Elwyn A. Barron and Wilson Barrett have almost completed a new play of the period of George III, in which Mr. Barrett will appear as a distinguished courtier, greatly harassed by the guardianship of the spendthrift hero.

RULES FOR CAMP WEEPERS.

On the flap of a tent of a company in one of the military camps near New York is pinned a card on which is written:

TO VISITORS.

Glad to see you always.

We are not afraid—not yet.

We know we are liable to be shot.

Yes, if we have a chance we shall shoot.

We don't know how we will feel until we get hit.

The tent leaks when there is rain. We have had some leaks.

We are liable to be sick. We might be sick if we staid at home.

Are we warm enough at night? Not as warm as we expect to be.

We are not dying to get into the hospital. We may die after we get there.

We are sorry we are going to leave our wives and our children and our sweethearts.

If you have tears to shed, please notify the guard so that he may show you where the shed is.

If you are our sweethearts, you know what to do, but be careful. The officer of the day may be a bachelor.

We were never in the other war. If we had been, we wouldn't be in this one—on account of our age and for some other reasons.

If you are our wives and children, please do not weep and make a scene in camp. We went through that at the house. Besides it unnerves the boys in the other tents.

We are fond of war pictures. Those that represent us as facing bursting shells and walking over the mangled remains of our comrades and dead horses and that have vultures in the air are especially fascinating to a young soldier in camp.

THE BEEHIVE.

Pollen stored in hives is known as bee bread.

When water is not convenient, it should be supplied.

In attempting to move bees be sure that every exit is closed.

Bees need the most attention during the spring and early summer.

Bees should never be handled without smoke close at hand to control them.

A bee flies in a direct line and will not fly up or down to come into your face.

Of all sources from which bees derive their support the clover is the most important.

The clovers yield large quantities of pure white honey, and plenty of clover blossoms means a rich honey harvest.

The drone bee is longer developing than either the queen or worker. It is 24 days from the egg to the fully developed drone.

After mating is accomplished the queen, in two or three days, will commence laying and will never leave the hive unless to go out with a swarm.

Comb foundation is made from beeswax and except for thickness is nearly like the natural comb. By its use the expensive work of secreting wax for comb is saved, besides securing straighter combs.—St. Louis Republic.

A petition is being circulated asking that A. E. Janvier be appointed Superintendent of Schools, vice S. W. Austin resigned.

The Kern Rand Company has laid out a canal in the gorge of the South Fork of Kern River, at the point where the stream enters the valley, with the idea of generating electricity for Randsburg and other camps not supplied with water power. The company will be able to utilize a fall of 700 feet on a stream whose minimum flow is sixty cubic feet per second. Besides this, there are two factors which tend to render this power capable of indefinite enlargement: First, Whitney Creek in past ages constituted the source of the South Fork, but a slide filled the channel and threw it over into a gulch flowing into the main river. For many years the farmers in the South Fork valley have maintained a tunnel through this slide, in order to replenish the supply of water for irrigation during the fall months. Just now the tunnel is out of repair. Second, on the head of the South Fork is one of the noblest sites for a large reservoir in the State of California. The engineers after completing the survey of the canal, which is to be above three miles in length, have started on a survey of the transmission line to Randsburg, and will probably reach that place within the next week.

The secretary of the treasury has asked for takers for $200,000,000 in bonds to carry on the war with Spain. They will bear three per cent interest, and are payable in coin at the pleasure of the government. Here is a chance for men with idle money to become bloated bondholders.

A Connecticut judge is reported to have instructed a jury in the following language: Gentlemen, you have heard the evidence. The indictment charges the prisoner with stealing a jackass. The offense seems to be becoming frequent. The time has come when it must be stopped, otherwise, gentlemen, none of you will be safe.

Snobbishness.

A lady living in an unfashionable street invited a gentleman of leisurely life to her home, because in her simplicity she thought he seemed lonely. He came, and at the close of the evening remarked to her, "I had no idea I should meet so many distinguished people at your house," his voice unconsciously emphasizing the pronoun. In a little book, "About People," Mrs. Kate Gannett Wells gives the following instance of a lack of good manners:

Snobbishness is not confined to one set of people. Emphasized by fashion or literary pretensions, it spreads from village to city. It exists in sardine factories and in palatial mansions; it is met with at picnics and dances as well as at dinner or conversation parties. The links are close.

One of Boston's oldest families gave a reception. Two scions of other old families attended, to whom the host said, "I'll introduce you to those ladies opposite," and he moved toward them.

"Excuse us," said one of the men; "the ladies are of a peasant style of beauty; it is hardly worth while."

The host bowed low in recognition of their farseeing power, adding, "Yes, they are my nieces from the country, but I will not trouble you."

No apology would he receive, though one was eagerly offered.

Woman's Wit.

An emperor of Germany besieged a city which belonged to one of his rebellious noblemen. After the siege had lasted for a long time the emperor determined to take it by storm and to destroy all it contained by fire and sword. He did not, however, wish to injure the defenseless women; therefore, he sent a proclamation into the town, saying that all the women might leave the place unhurt and carry with them whatever they held most precious. The nobleman's wife instantly decided to take her husband, and the other women followed her example. They soon issued from the city gate in a long procession, each one with her husband on her shoulders. The emperor was so much struck with the noble conduct of the women that he spared all; even the city itself was left untouched.

An English Diplomatist.

Sir Claude Macdonald, the British minister to China, is 46 years old and holds rank in the army as a major. He served with the Seventy-fourth highlanders and was in the Egyptian campaign of 1882 and the Suakim expedition before he was appointed consul general at Zanzibar in 1887. After leaving east Africa he was sent to the Niger, where he proved a very successful consul general in the Niger Coast Protectorate, as the district, which was once known as the "Oil Rivers Protectorate," is now designated. Sir Claude's career in west Africa was cut short in 1896 by his selection for the embassy at Peking.

A CHILD'S USE OF MONEY.

Various Answers Received From a Large Number of Public School Pupils.

Dr. George E. Dawson of the Bible Normal college has classified answers received from 1,307 pupils of the public schools of this city, given in response to the question, "If you had $5, all your own, what would you do with it?"

Of those who passed in answers 669 were boys and 638 were girls, their ages ranging from 5 to 16. The answers are grouped under nine general heads: 44 per cent would deposit the money in a bank, 13.8 per cent would buy clothing, 2.2 per cent would buy something to eat, 15.3 per cent would buy toys and other means of amusement, 2.1 per cent would buy jewelry and finery, nine-tenths of 1 per cent would buy firearms, 1.7 per cent would spend for travel, 14 per cent would spend for others and 6 per cent would buy books, etc. It is interesting to note the large per cent who express a disposition to save. Dr. Dawson attributes this largely to the suggestability of the children. The results in this respect resemble those obtained in other fields of experiment. While the children do not realize the full significance of saving, the idea has been engrafted upon their minds and is bound to have its influence. The fact that this idea of saving has been thus forcibly impressed on the minds of so many is very significant and gives us a hint of the immense influence of public instruction.

In noting the per cent of those who would buy clothing it should be remembered that many of the children were in urgent need of something better to wear. Those who voted for something to eat were mostly under 7 years of age. In the class who would prefer amusements the girls usually expressed a wish for dolls and doll carriages while the boys mostly desired pigeons, rabbits or other pets. In regard to travel, the figures show that as children grow older the desire to go out into the world increases rapidly, reaching its height at about the beginning of adolescence. The desire shown by the boys for firearms is an expression of the hunting instinct that awakens when they are 10 or 12. At that age boys like to get hold of books of hunting and adventure. The tendency to buy books increases steadily as the children grow older. This class numbers about twice as many girls as boys. The class which manifests a feeling of altruism also numbers more girls than boys, showing that the greater generosity of women is strikingly manifest even at an early age.—Springfield Republican.

An Important Coachman.

A large part of the charm of the altogether charming city of Washington is found among the blacks. The drivers, for example, of the various dilapidated vehicles, which are by courtesy called carriages, are thoroughly amusing. One who drove a large, lank animal built on the lines of a wooden horse and with little more spirit in him sat on the box of a four wheeler that would have disgraced the stables of a country inn. The flourish and elegance of that coachman, however, were as fine as if he wore the liveries of the president and held the ribbons over the most prancing steeds. He kept his eyes inflexibly fixed upon the ears of his horse and drew up at a destination with the air of reining in a mettlesome charger. When his carriage was emptied, he passed on with a flourish and sweep, headed around and at once put his entire outfit at sharp attention. The ceremony of approaching the curb, on seeing his fare reappear, was equally imposing. His green driver's coat was ragged and shabby, his hat was slightly battered and knew no shine, his whip was as destitute of springs as were the seats of his brougham, and the rough coat of his steed was all that saved the animal from gaunt emaciation, yet over the whole establishment that inimitable darky contrived to throw an air of elegance that was as serious as laughable.—New York Post.

Some Hair Cuts.

"There are lots of men," says a Philadelphia barber, "who are very particular about hair cuts, but wouldn't have a word to say if they didn't have to pass inspection before their wives when they go home. I know one woman who goes so far as to accompany her husband to the barber shop. There's a regular customer of mine who is always attended by his wife when he gets his hair cut, and she stands right back of me while I work. Every few minutes I stop, and she looks over his head and makes suggestions about a 'little more off here,' 'don't shave his neck' and a lot of such comments. The waiting customers enjoy it pretty well, but I'll bet you he will want a divorce in a year, if he hasn't asked for it already."—Exchange.

Abyssinia's Emperor.

The emperor of Abyssinia is about 6 feet in stature without shoes and is stoutly built. His skin is very dark, and he wears a short, curly beard and mustache. His face is heavy in cast, but is redeemed from positive plainness by an extremely pleasant expression and a pair of most intelligent eyes. His smile takes in a wider section of the circumference of his head than is common and displays a particularly fine set of teeth. He generally wears a large black Quaker hat over a white silk handkerchief tied around his head, and a black silk, gold embroidered cloak over a profusion of white linen underclothing.

Two Phases.

"Well, I detest Mrs. Brown; she never will tell what she pays for anything."—Detroit Free Press.

THE FAMILY STORY

JUPITER : JENKINS, Schoolmaster.

"Jovi non Placet" wrote the red headed girl in the back seat of the wide, oblong school room. Harrison Jenkins, the presiding genius of the place, stood scowling behind his desk, struggling with the class in Latin. These young boys and girls, who looked pityingly up to his dark face, were struggling with the verb "sum."

The lesson had been poorly prepared and the issue of thunderbolts was soon expected to shower from this pedagogical Olympus. At last it came.

Mr. Jenkins brought his fist down upon the plain deal board with a thump that awoke every languid mind in the room. "Is this what you come to school for?" he began, as if addressing a jury. "Is this the way you use one of the most precious gifts that God has given to you? Here you are, a whole class of bright boys and girls, with brains enough to do anything you desire in this great world, throwing away the greatest opportunity of your lives. If this was an institution for weak-minded children I would have some compassion for you. But your faces are all bright and your eyes are clear, and yet you will come to me with such a lesson as this!" Mr. Jenkins punctuated every sentence with that echoing thump on the desk which carried conviction and mortification to the minds of each boy and girl before him.

It was then that the red-headed girl on the back seat wrote "Jovi non placet" ("It is not pleasing to Jupiter").

Geraldine Coffin was Mr. Jenkins' pride. He had no favorites; at least, such never appealed in the little commonwealth which he held in the hollow of his hand. But in Geraldine he was intensely interested, and he often found in her his greatest irritation. While Mr. Jenkins held the whole of his fifty odd young spirits in the hollow of his hand, the red-headed girl was the one person he was not quite sure of. Geraldine had given him the name of "Jupiter," and it fitted so well that it was at once adopted by all his subjects.

"When he pounds his desk and that great shaggy head shakes so, and his blue eyes flash, all I can think of is Jupiter sending thunderbolts to earth"—and in this remark Geraldine had christened him. Many times he had thought he had heard the name of Jupiter Jenkins, but he had never been able to capture one of these erring mortals. Of course, he knew he was called Jupiter—he had been told so by admiring parents, who knew he would be pleased, and he was.

But it was with the red-headed girl that this story is chiefly concerned. She was the only human problem that Jupiter Jenkins could not solve. Geraldine Coffin had been an inmate of the schoolroom only a few days when Mr. Jenkins discovered that she possessed an unusual mind. He laid his plans to make the most he could of her. He was accustomed to use the parable of the talents in the schoolroom, and to say that to whom much was given much would be required. The getting of lessons was an easy matter to Geraldine Coffin. She not only learned them, but the truths and principles were digested, and sank into her mind, clearly understood and stored away, until the day which would call them into use.

Jupiter Jenkins was accustomed to say that hardly more than one child in twenty really digested knowledge.

II.

He had come to complain to Geraldine's mother that her daughter sometimes failed in her lessons, and that it was inexcusable in one who had such a mind. "I have come to tell you this, Mrs. Coffin, when I would not take the trouble to inform another mother, for this reason and it alone: Geraldine has an unusual mind, and she can make anything she pleases of herself. If she knows you and I are one in this matter, she will not care to trouble us by neglecting to get her lessons."

Geraldine's mother was as much flattered as any other woman would be, and, of course, Jupiter Jenkins was upheld. Thus he dealt with Geraldine, conscious of his power. He endeavored to make her fail, and, whenever she did, she was compelled to remain after school and get her lessons.

But, with a wonderful mind, there was a somewhat wayward nature in the texture of Geraldine Coffin's personality. She was often rough and hoydenish, and she caused no end of trouble. With the deep interest the young master took in her, a sense of power developed. When Mr. Jenkins supposed he had her solidly in his control, there would burst forth a fit of "don't care" in her which astonished and alarmed him.

Then the thunderbolts flew to punctuate the master's fluent words of indignation. "When one has the mighty gift of brains," he thundered, "and life's road lies before to choose what is best and highest, to be lazy and languid, and not to reach the arm to grasp the golden apple of Hesperides, is the greatest wrong."

It was then that Geraldine, her color slightly brighter and her head a trifle higher, would return to her seat and write, "Jovi non placet"—"It is not pleasing to Jupiter."

There were certain rare facts about Geraldine that Jupiter Jenkins, in his teacher's enthusiasm, had not noticed. One of these was that she was a very pretty girl. But if he had been impervious to this fact there were others who had not, and among those were some of the big boys in the school.

Geraldine was growing, and she was now tall and lithe of figure, with her big blue eyes clearer and more expressive, as she looked at people. The true soul of a rather designing maiden was showing forth from them. She was glad to receive attentions, and it smote Jupiter hard when he observed that she walked with one and then with another in the still and balmy spring evenings. Just why it smote him as it did Mr. Jenkins never knew until a few years later.

But it did, and Geraldine's face seemed to have framed itself into the center of his thoughts. She recurred to his consciousness constantly, and when he thought of these big boys he was truly uncomfortable.

He had another conference with Mrs. Coffin, in which he suggested that Geraldine had better be kept in the house and made to give closer attention to her lessons. When he called her in recitations he was also doing his best to make the girl fail. And when she did fail he did his best to make it uncomfortable for her. She had to remain after school and get the whole lesson. Jupiter made her recite it all, "precept upon precept," so to speak.

He had conceived the ambition to make a teacher of the girl. He broached the subject to Mrs. Coffin. "Geraldine," he began, "is cut out to be a teacher." Mrs. Coffin started in astonishment. "Yes she is," he affirmed, with a thunderbolt, "and she ought to be sent to a normal school. I never went to one, and what I know about teaching has been gained by experience. But there is no mistake. The learning of methods means something in these days, and I'm sure that if Geraldine is sent to a normal school she will make a first-rate teacher."

Mrs. Coffin thought it over for a few days, and then came to the conclusion that Mr. Jenkins was right. That was the usual conclusion about Mr. Jenkins in the little village. The idea was placed before Geraldine, and when she heard of Jupiter's proposal she smiled a smile that made her mother look at her twice. But Geraldine had the key to certain kinds of human nature which was far beyond her years. She thought she would like to go, and it was a great joy when she came to Jupiter's throne, and in her sweetest and calmest manner thanked him for his kindness, and said she would do her best to deserve it. That was the happiest day that Jupiter had ever had in the school. He did not understand it, but there was a singing in his heart as homelike as the singing of a tea kettle and as soft as a cat's purr.

Geraldine took new interest in school. She tried no more of her subtle ways to disturb Jupiter, and the boys found a change in her, which at once set their former interest at naught.

"She ain't no more fun," they all agreed, and they troubled her no more.

III.

Geraldine entered the normal school and passed her preliminary examinations with extraordinary success. She was one of the highest three out of a large class. The veteran principal of the school knew human nature at a glance. He wrote to Jupiter a letter which confirmed all that worthy had said about the wild, nomadic Geraldine.

When Geraldine returned at the end of her first year the townspeople began to relent in the hard opinion they had entertained of her, and saw another person in the tall and earnest young woman who had appeared before them. Jupiter Jenkins had ended his work as schoolmaster in the little seaport town. He had been studying law, and was now employing the same forensic talents he had used before his schoolroom in a more lucrative if not a higher court. He was "up in the city," and was making a name.

When Geraldine had finished her course in the normal school she received the highest commendation, and the old principal happened to find a good place for her in the same city where Jupiter was making his way.

When Geraldine had come into his office at the end of the first quarter it was the first intimation that he had received of her presence in the city. She said she had come to make a payment, and while she spoke poor Jupiter was turning all sorts of ruddy colors.

"But I hadn't heard you were here, Geraldine," he said. "I have been thinking of you, too, and wondering if I should hear from you. Of course, I knew I should. But somehow I cannot get you out of my head, girl." This was punctured with one of the old-time thunderbolts. "Fact is, Geraldine, I've only just found out why I treated you so hard when in school. And it was simply this—I loved you! I want you always; I want you to make me happy, to be my wife!"

Geraldine smiled as she raised her face and received the salute from his lips.

"I knew that was the matter all the time," she said.—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

AND IT WAS SIMPLY THIS—I LOVED YOU! I WANT YOU ALWAYS—

PROLIFIC LIFE IN ALASKA.

Full of Fur-bearing Animals and Feathered Songsters.

John Muir, who has summered and wintered in the Alaskan lands, toward which all men's eyes and many men's feet are now turning, says in the Atlantic: Nowhere on my travels so far have I seen such warm-blooded, rejoicing life as in this grand Arctic reservation, by so many regarded as desolate. Not only are there whale in abundance along the shores, and innumerable seals, walruses and white bears, but great herds of fat reindeer on the tundras, and wild sheep, foxes, hares, lemmings, whistling marmots and birds. Perhaps more birds are born here than in any other region of equal extent on the continent. Not only do strong-winged hawks, eagles and water fowl, to whom the length of the continent is only a pleasant excursion, come up here every summer in great numbers, but also many short-winged warblers, thrushes and finches, to rear their young in safety, re-enforce the plant bloom with their plumage and sweeten the wilderness with song, flying all the way, some of them, from Florida, Mexico and Central America. In thus going so far north they are only going home, for they were born here, and only go south to spend the winter months, as New-Englanders go to Florida. Sweet-voiced troubadours, they sing in orange groves and vine-clad magnolia woods in winter, in thickets of dwarf birch and alder in summer, and sing and chatter more or less all the way back and forth, keeping the whole country glad. Oftentimes in New England, just as the last snow patches are melting and the sap in the maple begins to flow, the blessed wanderers may be heard about orchards and the edges of fields, where they have stopped to glean a scanty meal, not tarrying long, knowing they have far to go. Tracing the footsteps of spring, they arrive in the tundra homes in June or July, and set out on their return journeys in September, or as soon as their families are able to fly well.

You hold me fast!" said he.

TRIALS OF A PUBLIC MAN.

It Takes Time to Get Used to the Ways of Newspaper Correspondents.

A new member of the senate was complaining to an old member of some of the difficulties he was encountering. "For one thing," he said, "these newspaper fellows don't always get things straight. I don't mean to accuse them of carelessness or of intentional misrepresentation, but now and then some remarkable stories are printed about me at home."

"You'll get used to that," replied the veteran. "That won't hurt. That's part of your apprenticeship. I've been all along there. Let me tell you of a little experience of mine. Soon after I first came here I picked up a paper from my state and saw it asserted in a letter from Washington that my colleague and myself had met and arranged a slate, and that all the patronage for the state would be distributed according to that arrangement.

"There was no warrant for the statement, and I made inquiries for the correspondent. He came to see me and proved to be a bright and most agreeable young man. I asked him for his authority, and he pleasantly refused to give it, but said that he had every faith in his informant. To that I replied that all I would ask, then, would be the privilege of denying the story—of putting my statement against the other. He said that was only fair and that he would attend to the matter.

"When the correction appeared, it read something like this: 'Your correspondent's story about the deal between Senator —— and his colleague, by which the patronage of the state is to be divided between them, has raised quite a stir here. There is no question as to its absolute truth. But Senator ——, who evidently has been rattled by the publication, now solemnly assures your correspondent that he had nothing whatever to do with the deal.' After that I went slow on corrections."—Bangor Whig and Courier.

THE DEATH RATE.

While it is quite true that the proportion of deaths from malaria as an immediate cause is proportionally small, as cited in annual mortuary statistics, yet physicians are thoroughly convinced that it causes maladies of a fatal character, and begets dangerous nervous prostration. This malady is eradicated and prevented by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which also cures biliousness, constipation, rheumatism and dyspepsia.

A dull, throbbing pain, accompanied by a sense of tenderness and heat low down in the side, with an occasional shooting pain, indicates inflammation.

The region of pain shows some swelling. This is the first stage of ovaritis, inflammation of the ovary. If the roof of your house leaks, my sister, you have it fixed at once; why not pay the same respect to your own body?

Write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., and tell her all your symptoms. Her experience in treating female ills is greater than any other living person. The following from MRS. ANNIE CURTIS, Ticonderoga, N. Y., is proof of what we say:

"For nine years I suffered with female weakness in its worst form. I was in bed nearly a year with congestion of the ovaries. I also suffered with falling of the womb, was very weak, tired all the time, had such headaches as to make me almost wild. Was also troubled with leucorrhœa, and was bloated so badly that some thought I had dropsy. I have taken several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and several of her Blood Purifier, and am completely cured. It is a wonder to all that I got well."

WHAT are these stars that men should die,
And dying, hold them yet on high?
Do they the stars of night outvie?

The stripes that you so boldly bear
To battle—can their glow compare
With blood of men left lifeless there?

Or can this azure compensate
For home-ties broken, or abate
The grief and tears your deaths create?

Those stars—the stripes, the blue, the white
No power but God's can disunite;
Symbol of Freedom, might and right—
Lead on! Lead on, we follow thee!

All o'er the world loud paeans swell,
Which proudly to the nations tell
That to the very gates of hell,

If that flag leads, we follow it!

BABY SOPRANO.

Wee Two-Year-Old Girl Who Sings Grand Operas.

The youngest musical wonder in all New York is little Marguerite Mandelkern, just 2 years and 3 months old. The wee girl has not yet learned to lisp plainly the mingled English and German in which she expresses herself, but there is no music too difficult for her to sing with absolute precision after once or twice hearing it upon the piano.

The little treble voice is as clear and true as a bell, and most intricate measures are given with a strict adherence to time that would make a prima donna envious.

The child is a daughter of Joseph Mandelkern, of No. 106 East One Hundred and Twentieth street, and has doubtless inherited her marvelous ear from her father, whose ruling passion is music. For hours, while her sister Elizabeth, a pianist of no mean order, is playing, Baby Marguerite will creep into the room and lie silently listening. This had been going on for some time before the family observed the little one's habit and became aware of her devotion to melody.

It was when near her second birthday, however, that the infant musician essayed her own powers. Her choice was grand opera, and her debut made in an aria from "Aida." As the first note was struck "Gracie," as she is known at home, stopped suddenly in her play, threw back her head, parted her red lips and to the surprise of every one present sang in a sweet, pure thread of tone the entire aria.

Once having found her voice the little maid, tremulous with delight, went on to make her own every theme that appealed to her. And Gracie knows, too, everything that she sings. It is a matter of moment to this small music lover whether it be Verdi or Mendelssohn that occupies her attention.—New York World.

Educated Tinkers.

A leading Australia paper calls attention to the fact that Bulgaria would offer a much larger market for agricultural machinery if there were some reliable repair shops for such machinery in the country. If there is but the smallest repair work on such a machine to be done nobody can be found to do it, and in many cases German experts have been called for. The Economical Society of the Bulgarian capital has just now submitted a memorial to the government asking for the state appointment of some 75 to 100 capable mechanics able to do this kind of work. The ministry supports this scheme, and decided that these mechanics should have to instruct in the first place the rural population in the application of improved agricultural machinery and implements.

This impetus will doubtless result in a large increase of the imports of all kinds of agricultural machinery.—Philadelphia Record.

INDICATE CHARACTER.

What Different Kinds of Noses Mean to Their Owners.

A thick nose and flat is an unfavorable feature with men as well as women, usually signifying that the character is predominated by material instincts, while a turned-up nose with wide nostrils betokens a vain disposition.

Especially wide nostrils are signs of courage, strength and pride; small nostrils of weakness and timidity. Noses large in every respect are usually found among men, and when a woman possesses a large nose it indicates she is masculine in character.

The nose, the form of which has so much to do with the beauty of the face, is amenable to culture, and we have it on the authority of a German physician that it is beyond dispute that during half an ordinary human life the nose is capable of receiving more noble form. The mental training of an individual has a great deal to do with shaping the nose.

The small, flat nose, found among women and called the soubrette nose, when occurring with an otherwise agreeable cast of countenance, indicates a gracious and cheerful naivette, combined with considerable curiosity. Such a nose is seldom found among men, and when a man is unfortunate enough to possess it he is characterized by weak and definite sagacity.—Philadelphia Press.

German Geographical Prize.

Herr Krupp, of Essen, has given 10,000 marks to the German Geographical Society for a gold medal, to be awarded yearly for geographical discovery. It will be called the Nachtigal medal, after Krupp's friend, Gustav Nachtigal, the African explorer, and, where the merits of candidates are otherwise equal, will be given in preference first to discoveries on the African continent, and next to exploration in German colonies elsewhere.

TO DRY CHILDREN'S SHOES.

The Way to Do It So that the Leather Will Not Shrink.

"Damp feet are always walking toward disease and death," says an eminent physician, and a more impressive truth it would be difficult to put into words. Children must play out of doors and they will run about in all weather. It is almost always the case that when the little shoes come off at night, they are damp, if not actually wet. The careless mother passes them by, thinking that they will dry by morning, forgetting that, even though they do dry, they will be harsh, uncomfortable and irritating to tender little feet, and may lay the foundation for discomfort and suffering untold. When the little ones have finished their play, they should be taught to remove their shoes and stockings and put on dry ones. House shoes of soft leather or felt are inexpensive and comfortable, and they last a long time, besides being a great saving in noise and the nerve irritation that is often harder to bear than the laborious work with which the housemother has to struggle.

As soon as the shoes are taken off they should be filled to the very tops with dry oats. It is a custom of one of the most provident women who ever raised a family to prepare stocking feet of the sizes of the various shoes worn by the children. These are numbered and hung on a nail in the entryway, where the little ones keep their wrappings. These stockings feet have short tops; in fact, they are shaped more like a baby's sock than anything else. They are filled with oats and sewed up at the top. A couple of inches of extra room is allowed at the top, and when the shoes are to be filled, the oats are shaken loosely through the stocking, then it is put into the shoe and adjusted as nearly in the form of the human foot as possible. A few gentle raps will settle the oats into the shoe; then a strong cord is tied around the stocking top as close to the grain as possible. The oats being perfectly dry occupy a given amount of space. As they absorb the moisture, which they begin to do immediately, they swell a little and keep the leather from shrinking.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

The True Poet.—Jesus is the earth's truest poet. He translated mankind's innate convictions into plain words.—Rev. Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

Man's Power.—The power and worth of a man have sometimes a way of evincing themselves by what he does and says. It is also impressively true that the power and worth of a man may evince themselves, if not so startling, at least more indubitable.

Wisdom's Ways.—The young should know that wisdom's ways alone are ways of peace. God's favor is the highest good; heaven is the noblest reward. Conscience should be always king, character is pure gold, reputation is but tinsel.—Rev. T. M. Griffith, Methodist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Optimism.—There is no question that the moral light of our community is improving in quality, bringing more and more into the view the things that are pure and true and good, and driving into the outer darkness those things that are evil.—Rev. W. T. Hutchins, Evangelist, Indian Orchard, Mass.

Old Truths.—In this age of the Krupp gun an old-fashioned blunderbuss is out of date, even in spiritual warfare. This principle applies to the pulpit. We need no new Gospel, but old truths in new dress. The pews would be fuller if there was greater ability in the pulpit.—Rev. J. P. Brushingham, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

Life's Lesson.—Music, and especially the organ, is a great lesson to all of us in life. Each individual must learn the rules of harmony which shall teach him the great lessons of order and subserviency. Over the organ must rule a sovereign mind, just as in every community must rule the higher intelligence.—Rev. H. C. Potter, Episcopalian, New York City.

Good Times.—Better times are ahead. Christian people are walking to their opportunity. They are showing greater faithfulness and more enterprise, and I have no doubt that our children's children will see times as much better than these as our times are better than the good old times of our fathers.—Rev. Frank M. Goodchild, Baptist, New York City.

Personal Liberty.—A great many young people have been kept out of the church of Christ by the impressions they have gained, that to be a Christian is not to be a free man. Therefore, I think we Christians ought so to use our liberty as to emphasize the fact that we have it.—Dr. Lyman Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, New York.

A Heartless Girl.

"Miss Renfrew—Alice," he cried, "I must speak. For a week I have walked about as one dazed. I have been unable to eat. At night I have tossed upon my bed, to arise, haggard and miserable, in the mornings. I——"

"Oh," the fair girl interrupted, "I know what is the matter with you. Go and play croquet or golf. You need exercise."

Clearly a Suspicious Character.

"Why did you arrest that man?"

"Because he said he had come out here from Boston to settle up an estate 'for a widow woman.'"

Tramps have one redeeming quality: you never heard of them getting mixed up in labor riots

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

A COLUMN OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO THEM.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

Boys in the Country.

Country boys read with interest these words of Major General Nelson A. Miles, the famous Indian fighter: "I lived as a farm boy the happiest years of my life. I think such a life laid the foundation for my healthy constitution, its simplicity and purity having a great influence upon my after success, greater than anything else. It taught me habits of industry and economy, and its freedom and independence caused me to acquire the habit of self-reliance."

Where the Old Money Goes.

In the United States Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Washington hundreds of thousands of dollars in torn and soiled bills are destroyed each day. The money comes from banks in all parts of the country, is counted by an expert, is then cut in two, lengthwise, and each half is recounted by different persons. The money is then reduced to a pulp by disintegrating chemicals, the bills being thrown into a large revolving cylinder partially filled with the chemicals. This process is called maceration, and the pulp so obtained is pressed into sheets resembling white cardboard and is then sold for about $40 per ton. In this manner the government pays the expense of maceration. The doors to the maceration rooms are carefully guarded and can be entered only by three officials who have keys.

Where Bait Is Found.

Pretty soon the boys will be digging for bait, and if they are not posted they may find their search fruitless, or, baitless, rather.

Angle worms may be found in any moist, mucky soil, where sod or trees or bushes are growing, but you must dig around the roots, the banks of a river or lake being capital places for the search.

Best to capture frogs, search for them in the marsh grass not far from grassy ponds; but hunt early in the morning or at dusk in the evening, when the dew is heavy.

You can usually find crayfish in clay soil that is moist, where they dig holes resembling snake holes, and can be tempted out by a chunk of raw meat, which you may tie to a long piece of string and drop into the hole. When you feel a tug at the string, slowly pull the meat out and the crab will follow.

Fat white grubs, the best of all spring bait, may be found in quantities in decayed logs and stumps, or in that portion of the barnyard compost pile which lies next to the side of the barn.

Ostrich's Odd Trap.

The oddest predicament in which an ostrich ever found itself lately befell one of the huge birds belonging to a South African farmer. This ostrich stole and bolted while steaming hot a big dumpling. The bird's regret was immediate and visible. In his struggle to get rid of the fiery thing within him Mr. Ostrich twisted his supple neck around one of his legs and succeeded in tying it in a knot. It required three men and half an hour's time to extricate the bird from its self-made trap.

SOMEWHAT TWISTED.

"Growing Up" in Japan.

In St. Nicholas there is a paper on "The Little Japanese at Home," by Ida Tigner Hodnett. Miss Hodnett says, in describing the "growing up" of a boy:

When he is three years old, he begins to wear the obi, a girdle, three inches wide, which confines the kimono, a loose sort of garment, and the main part of the Japanese national dress, for both children and grown people. The putting on of the obi is the occasion of another family feast; and a very important garment it is, for it corresponds to pockets in an American boy's first trousers. The front part of the kimono, above the obi, is also used as a pocket; and the long, wide sleeves, sewed up at the lower end, make two very big ones.

When fifteen years old, the boy becomes of age, and a third family festival occurs. Another name is given him, and his hair is allowed to grow all over the head, like a man's. Previous to this time the head is shaved so as to allow the hair to grow only in spots or tufts, the place of the tufts varying up to the age of ten, when the crown only is shaved. At this festival celebrating his majority the manner of friends and relatives changes toward him, and while the day before he was still addressed as a child, now he is addressed in the ceremonious forms required by Japanese etiquette. The title of respect, san, is henceforth affixed to his name, even by those nearest and dearest. These titles, san, sama, always follow the name, and are never prefixed as with our "Mr." For example, a boy whose name is Kiyoshi will be called Kiyoshi-san. In his responses to the kind speeches made to him, the boy shows that he understands the new honors that have come upon him, anr that he is now ready to apply himself to the serious business of life.

It used to be a great thing to be born a samurai (sah-moor-ri) boy baby in Japan. The samurai were soldiers and scholars, and were entirely apart from and above the ordinary people. They could not engage in any business, nor could they marry into another class. This has all been changed since the Japanese revolution of 1867-68. The people are now divided into two large classes—the heimin (ha-meen), or commoners, the shizoku (shee-zo-koo), or gentry—and all have equal rights under the law. The average boy's success in life depends upon his own abilities, and the use he makes of the teaching he may have.

The first thing the samurai baby needed after he was put in his nurse's arms was a sword. Rather a queer thing for a baby to have, but then this baby was a samurai! No matter if the tiny hand could not grasp the handle, his nurse carried it for him; and when the obi became a part of his dress, the sword was fastened to it and hung by his side. To be sure, it was a wooden sword, but what of that? It was the badge of his rank, and must go wherever he did all day long, and when he went to bed it was laid close by. "The sword is the soul of the samurai" is an old Japanese saying, and it was thus early fastened to his side that he might become used to grasping it from infancy.

When our young samurai reached the age of seven, it was a day of great rejoicing. At the family festival two real metal swords were fastened to the obi, one on each side. The edges, however, were blunt, and accidents were further guarded against by having the swords so fastened in their sheaths that the young swordsman could not draw them out. These were now his constant companions until, at the age of fifteen, the weapons handed down in his family took place.

Juvenile Jokes.

Little Mamie was trying to write with a dull lead pencil that her mother had given her, but meeting with poor success she exclaimed: "Oh, mamma, the wood has slipped down over the lead and the marks won't come out!"

Eddie's father was a jeweler and sometimes the little fellow got business mixed up with Indian stories and Sunday school lessons. One Sunday morning he surprised his mother by asking: "Say, mamma, what tribe was it that made gold-plated calves—the Israelites or the Choctaws?"

Harry, aged 5, had been to Sunday school, and upon his return home he tried to tell his mamma about the lesson: "And you know, mamma," said he, "Lot's wife was awful meddlesome, and when God told her to mind her own business she got fresh and didn't mind, so God put her in a sack of salt."

Dorothy had heard some one singing that classical production, the "Little Alabama Coon," on the street. Presently she came to her mother and asked: "Mamma, what does 'swat' mean?" "What do you think that it means?" "Well, I don't know, mamma; but I s'pose that 'swat' is colored for spank!"

"Auntie" was writing to her son far away, and wanted to tell him about killing a turkey, but wasn't sure how to spell the word. Bessie (the children were in the kitchen) was mixed up also and couldn't tell her, but Preston, who can't talk plain, came to the rescue by saying: "Auntie, just tell him 'we tilled a dobler,' and that will be all right."

Black Art at the Dinner Table.

Although the culinary art has in the last twenty years made rapid strides, still there is a certain sameness about dinner parties which, to the habitual diner-out, comes but little short of dull monotony, says the London Sun. Now and again, however, one comes across a hostess whose imagination, or eccentricity, is the means of providing a meal for her guests upon lines other than those upon which the ordinary dinner is given. Such a one was a lady who lived in the neighborhood of Kensington, and who every year gave what she termed a memorial dinner, on the anniversary of her husband's death.

The room in which the dinner was given was draped for the occasion in mauve and black, no other colors being visible. The tablecloth was likewise of mauve silk, while the only floral decorations in use were violets. The lady guests arrayed in either black or mauve dresses! the footmen were dressed in black plush breeches, mauve silk stockings and black coats. On dinner being announced the hostess took the head of the table, but on either side of her, seated upon two stools, sat two black poodle dogs, excellently clipped after the approved French fashion, and with mauve-colored ribbon bows on their heads. These two dogs had been great pets of the lady's husband during his lifetime, and it was for this reason that they were allowed a seat among the guests at the dinner-table. The menu was remarkable for the absence of any color in the viands, save mauve, the rest being either black or white. Thus the soup was white, likewise fish and entrees. As regards game, the lady got over the difficulty, or at least met it half way, by providing black-cock. The sweets were maunve-colored or white, while at the end of the dinner black coffee was served.

It is said that every thread of spider's web is made up of about 5,000 separate fibers. If a pound of this thread were required it would occupy 28,000 spiders a full year to furnish it.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, JULY 1 1898

On Tuesday of last week the war with Spain was just two months old. During that time one important naval victory has been won, an army of about 7,500 troops has been dispatched to Manila—the first expedition now there—a number of merchant vessels have been captured as prizes, several fortifications in Cuba have been shelled and some of them demolished, and an army of occupation of 16,000 men has landed. Besides these active operations an army of about 156,000 men has been mobilized and is in process of being drilled into a military organization. At the same time this army is not yet fully equipped with arms, ammunition or clothing, and is not likely to be for some weeks yet. This is but little for a nation with such unlimited resources as this to accomplish in that ledgth of time, yet perhaps the delay has been inevitable, for a large part of the work had to reach from the foundation up. It may, perhaps, be interestfng to compare this progress with that of some of the European nations in recent wars. In 1866, when Prussia was on the eve of war with Austria, the former mobilized an army of 220,000 men, th roughly equipped, within two weeks. War was declared on June 15, and in four days Saxony, Hanover and Hesse had been occupied, the Hessian elector had been captured and the Hanoverion army had been isolated. Four days later the frontier was crossed by the advancing armies ond thre days later the first victory on Austrian soil was won; seven days later the decisive battle of Sadowa was fought, and twenty-three days later the preliminary treaty of peace was signed. The war was ended within forty-one days after war had been proclaimed. The Franco-Prussian war was not so precipitate, but there was considerable activity. The Germans received the declaration of war on July 19, and within two months France had been entered. MacMahon with the First Corps had been defeated, the battle of Sedan, at which MacMahon and Napoleon surrendered, had been won and Bazaine was cooped up in Metz, and Paris was completely invested. The war was practically ended, though there was a delay of several months before the various important cities capitulated and peace was declared. In the Russ-Turkish war the armies of invasion were on Turkish soil within one month after the declaration of war, though the hostilities were protracted several months by the stubborn resistance offered by the Turks, the war was being desperately contested within two months after its commencement, and the beginning of the end was in sight. It is true that the conditions in Europe are wholly dissimilar to those in this country, and that those conditions place upon European nations the onerous burden of being always in a state of preparation such as is not necessary in tHis country. Nevertheless, the United States has committed the error going to the other extreme. Two months ago the coast defenses were in no state of efficiency. The navy was considered so inadequate that it was necessary to go into foreign shipyards to purchase whatever could be found for sale. The war has shown that this country still has the material for the best fighters, by land and by sea, in the world, but it takes time to get that material into shape. Had the war been against any country capable of aggressive adtion, the United States would have suffered serious and costly reverses during this long period of preparation. A conflict with a country so prepared is by no means an impossibility. One year ago this country was on the verge of war with Great Britain over the Venezuelan question; the attitude of Germany with regard to the Phillipines is now menacing and may become more so; Japan, which is no insignificant antagonist since its recent awakening may come into conflict over the annexation of Hawaii; France and Austria are by no means out of the pale of possible antagonism in connection with Spanish affairs. In view of all these contingencies the policy of this country must be changed, and, while there is no necessity for the immense armaments of Europe, the appropriations for the naval force must be more liberal in the future.—Examiner.

Precautionary measures are to be taken by the navy department to provide against the necessity of forwarding north any of the smaller ships of Admiral Sampson's fleet which may be damaged either as a result of injury in action or from fouling through long contact with marine growths. Two large floating docks now completed at New York are to be purchased and towed south and located at the most accessible points on the gulf for the ships of the fleet. These docks have a larger capacity for taking vessels from the water than any of their type in this country. They each have a capacity of 3,500 tons, are newly built, and are the best of their kind now available. Negotiations for their purchase have been entered into, and congress has been asked for the necessary appropriation, as there is not enough of the regular defense fund to devote to this purpose.

WAR NEWS.

Gen. Shafter's army landed without opposition near Santiago. While proceeding inland they met with a hot reception and twelve Americans were killed and number wounded. The Spanish loss was heavy. Roosevelt's Rough Riders took a prominent part in the fight and suffered the heaviest loss.

The third fleet of transports has sailed for the Phillipines.

Admiral Camara's fleet was last reported at the mouth of the Suez canal, ostensibly bound for the Phillipines, but there is a well founded rumor afloat that instead of trying to recapture Manila it will proceed first to Hawaii and then to San Francisco, and inflict what damage it can.

An American squadron is being formed to attack the coast of Spain, which is now practically defenseless. Among those killed at the Santiago battle was Hamilton Fish, Jr., a nephew of Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State under President Grant.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN.

Propagation by root cuttings is practicable and easy with plums, cherries and all stone fruits.

Give currants plenty of room and good cultivation. Use white hellebore to keep off the worms.

Dwarf pear trees are much inclined to overbear, and overbearing is a prolific cause of poor fruit.

Grapes like their roots near the surface; therefore the food for them should be applied near the surface.

Maturing fruit tends to exhaust a tree; hence the necessity of feeding bearing trees by fertilizing the ground.

By beginning to plow the orchard when it is planted and keeping it up the roots grow down out of reach of the plow.

The peach tree is a rapid grower and needs liberal manuring. So far as possible all the manure should be well rotted.

Use care in spraying the foliage of the peach, plum and cherry. All are more susceptible to injury than that of the apple or pear.

Some reasons for the popularity of the Ben Davis apple are its large size, bright red appearance, productiveness and good keeping qualities.

In spraying young leaves are less injured than those fully developed and those on weak trees than those that are vigorous and healthy.—Exchange

POULTRY POINTERS.

Be sure to provide plenty of shade for fowls during the summer.

In quantity of eggs pullets will excel, but not in quality for hatching.

With guineas—to insure fertile eggs—it will be best to keep them in pairs.

When a chicken picks itself frequently, it is a good indication that it is lousy.

A good dust bath will help materially in keeping the fowls in a good condition.

Turkeys are good foragers and will pick up their food from the fields during the summer.

Care and cleanliness in feeding fowls will be richly repaid in increasing health and thrift.

As a rule if the hens take to roosting out of doors it will be found that the quarters are lousy.

Fowls may eat too much grain or meat for their health, but of milk they may drink all they want.

The evening rations of both ducks and turkeys should be scattered near the roosting places.—St. Louis Republic.

The Silver Peak Mines

It was rumored at the time that John W. Mackay was on the Coast a few months ago that he had in contemplation the purchase of the Silver Peak, 45 miles southeast of Candelaria. The mine had been idle for a long time, and, owing to litigation pending, it was understood that until a settlement had been made between the litigants or the case be settled in court, work could not be resumed. It was given out by Mr. Mackay's agents in the daily papers before the millionaire went East that he would not purchase property. This paper stated at that time that Mr. Mackay was negotiating for the property if he could make terms with the New York owner. That statement seems now to have been correct, as work has commenced on two of the largest claims on the property, the Crowning Glory and the Dridkwater. There is a tunnel in the latter 350 feet in length, which is being extended 250 feet further to cut the Dridkwater lode, which shows 10 feet in width of $15 ore. The vein in the Crowning Glory is 15 feet wide and the ore averages $12 per ton.—Mining and Electrical Review.

The Dr. Boucher referred to spent a couple of months at Bishop two years ago, and gave an exhibition mile with the pacing mare, Miss Logan. The race reported in the following took place at Denver, Col., on the 15th. "Eight horses faced the starter in the pace, Reward S. being a strong favorite but Miss Logan, the California mare owned and driven by Dr. A. W. Boucher of San Jose, proved to be the good thing of the meeting. She was a 10 to 1 chance for the first heat and as good as even money being laid against her by bookmakers that she would not show. She was well played by the few who ever stabled with her. Miss Logan made a runaway race of it, winning the three heats as she liked and pulled up in 2:17½, 2:12½ and 2:17. In the second heat she went to the half in 1:01½ as officially timed and jogged home. She is as fast as anything on the track.

The following communication was received this week, accompanied by a couple of giant trout:

INDEPENDENCE, June 27, 1898.

ED. INDEPENDENT:—Allow me to present you with a 23-inch speckled beauty from Kern Lake, where we have been fishing for a few weeks. I have built two boats there, with a carrying capacity of seven men each. I have also built a good fence around the Edwards meadow and Soda Spring to secure the feed for the benefit of tourists and pleasure seekers. This lake is within three days' travel from Independence, and is undoubtedly one of the grandest summer resorts in the Sierras. The fishing and feed are of the finest.

CLIFFORD BAXTER.

Last Saturday the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment rendered by the Superior Court of Mono county in the case of R. C. Broder et al vs. A. R. Conklin et al in favor of the defendants. There were two appeals, one from the judgment and the other from an order ordering the money deposited by the receiver to be paid over to defendants Conklin. This ends the Broder-Conklin litigation, unless a re-hearing is granted. This suit was commenced twelve years ago, has gone to the Supreme Court four or five times, and ends in a complete victory for the defendants.

Mrs. S. W. Austin, who has been visiting in Oakland for the past two months, has in preparation a book of nature rhymes for school children of the primary grades. The work is especially adapted to Pacific Coast conditions, and has met the approval of the pedagogical department of the State University.

Says an exchange: "A western man who had some fine horses to sell wrote to a friend in Washington asking if they could be sold in that city. The friend replied: "The people of Washington ride bicycles, the wagons are pulled by mules, the street cars are run by electricity and the government is run by jackasses, so there is no demand for horses.'

LEANING TOWER OF PISA.

One Cannot Help Being Nervous In Looking From Its Top.

In St. Nicholas, John Ward writes of "The Bell Towers of Italy." Mr. Ward says of the most famous of them all:

Pisa seems like a sleeping city, as she lies so quietly and silently along the two borders of the river Arno. She fell asleep several hundred years ago, after she had struggled valiantly for her independence and had won renown during the fierce contests between the Guelphs (partisans of the pope) and the Ghibellines (partisans of the emperor). Though Pisa has long since forgotten the days of her greatness, the world cannot forget them when it looks upon that wondrously beautiful group of four marble white buildings standing apart in the sacred corner—the cathedral, the baptistery, the campo santo (or burial ground), and, what interests us most of all, the remarkable campanile, so well known as the "leaning tower." This famous tower was built in 1174. Its construction is peculiar. There is in the center a hollow brick tube or cylinder; around this plain round tower the architects built eight stories of open galleries, with beautiful, slender columns of white marble supporting semicircular arches. The general effect is one of great delicacy and lightness, a fairylike tower of wonderful grace. The summit is 179 feet from the ground. As you all know, the tower leans 13 feet out of the perpendicular and looks as if it would surely fall over at any moment, but, as the center of gravity is still within its base, it is as safe as if it were erect. The foundations were probably imperfectly built at the start, for the tower began to lean before it was half finished, and we can see where at one point the builders tried to bring it back as much as possible to the vertical line by making the columns on the low side higher than the others. The walls, too, are strengthened with iron bars. Fancy the consternation of the architects when they saw their beautiful tower leaning over and its foundations sinking in the ground! It requires very steady nerves to carry us to the top, and we find ourselves clinging to the wall when we are on the leaning side.

This is what Charles Dickens says about the tower in his "Pictures From Italy:" "In the course of the ascent to the top the inclination is not very apparent, but at the summit it becomes so and gives one the sensation of being in a ship that has heeled over through the action of an ebb tide. The effect upon the low side, so to speak, looking over from the gallery and seeing the shaft recede to its base, is very startling, and I saw a nervous traveler hold on to the tower involuntarily after glancing down, as if he had some idea of propping it up."

When we reach the summit, we must not forget that this was where the great astronomer Galileo watched the stars, experimented on the fall of bodies and studied the law of gravitation. Here, too, in the upper story, hang the six bells, the largest of which weighs more than 12,000 pounds. The bell founders of Pisa had a wide reputation for casting bells of beautiful tone, sonorous and harmonious. They lavished on them all their art and their talent.

The Pasquareccia (the Paschal bell), the most famous of the Pisan bells, the one which was tolled when criminals were taken to execution, is ornamented with a figure of the Virgin and the devices of Pisa and has a rich, full tone.

A Dry Bath.

A Scotchman was once advised to take shower baths. A friend explained to him how to fit up one by the use of a cistern and colander, and Sandy accordingly set to work and had the thing done at once. Subsequently he was met by the friend who had given him the advice, and, being asked how he enjoyed the bath, "Man," said he, "it was fine! I liked it rale weel, and kept mysel' quite dry too." Being asked how he managed to take the shower and yet remain quite dry, he replied, "Dod, ye dinna surely think I was sae daft as stand below the water without an umbrella!"—London Answers.

Cause and Effect.

"Say, I haven't seen you at the club for a fortnight. What's the matter?"

"Just now I'm staying at home a good deal."

"Really?"

"Yes. My wife is visiting her parents."—Gaulois.

The largest bell in France has been hung in the belfry of the Church of the Sacred Heart in Paris. It weighs 25 tons, can be heard at a distance of 25 miles, and its vibration lasts six minutes.

MANUELA'S TRANSFORMATION.

THE poet to the contrary, notwithstanding, there are occasions when "it might have been" are joyful words. Most men, upon meeting again in after years their first loves, realize this, and offer up prayers of thanksgiving.

It was so with Hurlburt.

In the early days of the Pacific coast, Hurlburt was stationed at San Diego. It was a picturesque little town. Its streets were not much more than cow-paths, and its houses were mostly of the good old pattern—adobes, one story high, and built around a patio. In such a house as this lived Manuela Lopez, and in one of the cow-path streets Hurlburt first met her. It was upon a Sunday. Hurlburt had just come from inspection, and was on his way to dinner with friends in town. He still wore his regimentals, and was a very gorgeous sight indeed. He was also tall, and yellow-haired, and blue-eyed—quite the figure to strike the fancy of a pretty little Mexican girl who was coming home from mass.

She had read no books that could have told her that it was the accepted thing to do; she had probably never given such subjects a moment's thought; but when the mind of a child becomes the mind of a woman, it is at one bound, not by slow degrees. Inspiration struck full upon Manuela's brain, and she dropped her rosary. From which it may be inferred that the love of the fathers and the wisdom of ages has taught woman nothing new in affairs of the heart. The impulse of the intrigante and of the child of nature are the same.

Hurlburt, of course, was close to Manuela when the rosary dropped. He returned it to her. If she had not been with a servant, he might have spoken. As it was, he observed more narrowly, what he had been observing for some moments as he approached, that she was graceful and pretty. Then he raised his helmet and passed on.

You can count upon any one but the typical Anglo-Saxon. You expect men of Latin and Slav races to make fools of themselves. But the Anglo-Saxon is such a thoroughly logical, reasonable, clear-headed person that the bottom of your universe drops out when he deviates from the path of common sense. And when he does, it is never a mere digression. He goes, a flaming comet, whirling through space, and carrying all your stellar system of plans and beliefs before him. The last thing any one would have expected of a big, quiet, rational youth, such as was Hurlburt, was that he should wax romantic over a street meeting with an immature ruse to attract his attention. Nevertheless, that same day, after luncheon, he said to his host, as they sat smoking under the ramada, "Who lives in the house on the next street, where the two mocking-bird cages hang on the wall?"

"You must be more explicit," his host said; "there are a number of houses on the next street, and one and all have mocking birds."

"Yes," said Hurlburt; "but there is a hedge of red and white geranium in front of it."

"I saw you meet her," the civilian told him; "her name is Lopez—Manuela, I think."

Hurlburt became very red. When your phlegmatic man grows embarrassed he is badly embarrassed. It was some time before he regained speech and came floundering out of the sea of silence. When he did, he changed the subject.

Not that he abandoned the cause. Far from it. It took him two weeks, but he got himself introduced to Senor Lopez, and had then taken to call upon him. The senor was a well-educated man, and the most hospitable of his hospitable race. He made Hurlburt free of the house at once, and showed him everything it contained, save only Manuela.

"You must come again, often," he said, as they parted. Hurlburt replied that he would, and went again in three days. Neither did he see his lady of the rosary upon this occasion. He addressed himself to Senora Lopez, who was handsome and well preserved.

"You have a daughter, have you not, senora?"

Senora Lopez understood only just so much English as she chose. She did not choose to understand this. She turned her soft eyes upon her husband, and he answered for her.

"We have a daughter," he said, "but she is very young."

Hurlburt understood that he had offended a semi-oriental prejudice.

It having thus been made obvious to him that Manuela would not be produced by her parents, he went to an early mass at the church, met her, and introduced himself. It chanced that she was alone.

"May I walk home with you, senorita?" he said. "I have the pleasure of knowing your father."

"Yes, sir," said Manuela.

It was but a few hundred yards to her home, but he made the most of his time. Manuela answered him in monosyllables and raised her eyes but twice. Hurlburt's infatuation was complete. Senor Lopez was angry. He was very civil to the officer, but he sent the girl to her room at once.

"I met the senorita at mass," Hurlburt explained.

"Are you, then, a Catholic?" inquired the Mexican.

"No," said Hurlburt—and determined to pursue the policy that sages who know nothing of mankind tell us is invariably the best—"I went to the church on purpose to meet your daughter. I saw her on the street the other day"—he refrained in a moment of diplomacy from speaking of the dropped beads—"and I admired her very much. That is why I came to call upon you. I thought I would see her openly under her own roof. As I did not, I encountered her elsewhere. Now," said Hurlburt, leaning back in an easy pose that did not meet with the punctilious Mexican's approval, "I should like to ask you to be allowed to pay my court to your daughter."

Senor Lopez made no objection to the officer's suit, but he did object to his fashion of advancing it. He incased himself in perversity.

"My daughter, sir, is too young."

He rose to his feet by way of suggesting that Hurlburt would do well to take his leave. Hurlburt rose, too, but not to go.

"May I ask her age, senor?"

"She is sixteen years old."

"You have told me that you married the senora when she was but fifteen."

"That was in the old times. We do not do so any more."

"But I will be willing to wait for a year, if Senorita Manuela will love me."

"Sir, we will talk no more concerning this. My daughter is too young to be married, and I do not wish to give her to an American"—which was not in the least true. Up to then it had been his plan to do so, but his obstinacy was roused.

The result was one that any one, most of all a Mexican, should have foreseen. Hurlburt embarked upon an intrigue. He sent notes to Manuela, and got them from her in return. The notes led to meetings by night. The meetings led to infatuation. Warm Southern nights and a soft-eyed, soft-voiced girl can work mischief within the mind of a man. And a tall, blonde officer saying the first words of love she has ever heard can turn the head of any woman.

The clandestine interviews continued for several months. Then Hurlburt made one last attempt at frankness. He went to Senor Lopez again, and renewed his request to be permitted to pay his daughter court. The senor had conceived an unreasonable and great dislike for him, and refused.

Whereupon Hurlburt arranged another meeting with Manuela. He began to realize that they were both running terrible risks. Senor Lopez was quite equal to killing one of them if they should be discovered. But he did not suggest that to Manuela. Instead, he asked: "Do you love me, chiquita?"

"Yes, yes. Must I tell you so always?"

"Do you love me enough to leave your home for me?"

"I do not understand." The gentle eyes looked into his, perplexed.

"Will you marry me?"

"I would, but how can I?" she said. "My father will not consent to it."

"Do you love me enough to run away from your father, to disobey him, and go over to Mexico, across the border, with me? We can be married there, and then come back."

Hurlburt was an impassive, unemotional man, but his nerves were upon a fearful tension as he waited for the answer of an irresponsible child. She appeared to consider, and ended by agreeing. Hurlburt was beside himself with happiness.

A week later they went across the line and were married. They returned immediately, and had an interview with Senor Lopez. The Mexican was enraged. Hurlburt, having obtained what he wanted, was not inclined to be conciliatory, but Manuela and her mother patched up a peace. Manuela behaved beautifully, and Hurlburt was more enamored than ever. He took her back to his home, and for three days dreamed of a lifetime of bliss. Then Manuela decided that she had had enough of living on honeycomb, and that she had tired of scented time. With no explanations and no reason save that she wanted to go, she went. Her father, charmed with Hurlburt's discomfiture, refused to make her return to him, and guarded her closely. Hurlburt begged for one final interview, and it was granted. He was a sorry sight, pale and haggard and self-abasing. But Manuela was unmoved. She stood meekly before him, her folded hands holding a rose, her father and mother on either side of her. She was not in the least unhappy, and no grief had marred her prettiness.

"Manuela," said Hurlburt, "have you not changed your mind? Will you not come home with me?"

She shook her head. "No," she said.

"Why not? Was I not kind to you? Did I not love you?"

"Yes, you were very kind. But I like better to be with my father."

It was useless to threaten, implore, or reason. Manuela was gently stubborn. She would never go back to him; she did not like Americans.

When Hurlburt finally went away, he decided that his heart was broken. He thought of suicide. He could never bear up under the disgrace, and it was not so great as his wretchedness. This frame of mind lasted for a year; then he became resentful; then he obtained a divorce; then he was ordered East, and it was ten years before he returned to the coast. He had with him his wife—a woman of his own people, very charming, very well suited to him in every way. She knew the story of his first marriage, and she knew that, whatever he might say to the contrary, he still regretted deep down in his heart the sweet, soft Mexican wife of his youth, of his season of dear beliefs and illusions. The knowledge was the one grief of her life. It threw a shadow of sadness over her eyes. But she kept it to herself, and for this unfeminine virtue the gods, in due time, rewarded her.

They went one day, by ambulance from Wilmington, where Hurlburt was stationed, to Los Angeles. One of their mules got lame, and they had to spend the night at a roadside ranch. A crowd of dirty Mexican children played around the adobe; several yet dirtier men lounged about the door; a fat, beshawled woman waddled across the yard; a yet more untidy one welcomed them.

Her greasy face was still rather pretty and young, but she was thick, and heavy, and stupid. When she looked full at Hurlburt, she gave a little cry that was more of a grunt.

"Come in; I will tell my husband," she said, and shuffled away with her bare feet.

Hurlburt turned to his wife gravely. "I am sorry to have brought you here," he said, "but it is all we can do, unless you prefer to sleep in the ambulance to-night. That—woman was my wife."

"So I supposed," she said. She laid her delicate hand on his arm. "Don't let it trouble you, dear. I do not mind." she smiled into his eyes, and the shadow was forever gone from her own.—San Francisco Argonaut.

INVENTOR OF LEAD PIPE.

The Interesting Life of Robert Seydell of Milton.

There was born in Milton, Pa., in 1809 a man of wonderful genius, it is said. His name was Robert Seydell, and he died in 1847. Mr. Seydell was a coppersmith and was almost continuously working out some device connected with the machinery in his factory. To him, it is related by some of the oldest citizens of this place, belongs the discovery of the process of making lead pipe, and like many other inventors, the idea of making the same was stolen from him and further developed to its present form of manufacture.

It was in the latter part of the thirties that the idea suggested itself to him, and the following is the way he wrought it out: He first took a slug, or casting of lead, placing it on a mandel, or rod of steel, about sixteen feet long and one inch in diameter; the mandel was highly polished and upon this he drew or rolled out the lead to the full strength of the rod, thus giving him an inch bore, and the material was rolled, it is said, to a one-fourth inch, making a total diameter of one and one-half inches for the pipe. After completing several sections of the length o fthe mandel, he soldered them together, making the pipe of whatever length he desired.

He put it to practical use by fastening it to pump heads and also running it from springs to connect watering troughs and spring houses in the country round about here. Being greatly pleased with his discovery, and receiving the most flattering of comments from his friends and neighbors in this section, he concluded to make his invention more widely known, and hence made a visit to Philadelphia, taking his device with him.

At the Franklin Institute in that city he gave his first exhibition to quite a number of inventors, artisans and mechanics. As it is now related, all who witnessed it were more than delighted, and so expressed themselves in his immediate presence.

It was not long that he was allowed to remain in a condition of supreme happiness over his invention, for a short time after he made a disclosure of his discovery, and while yet in Philadelphia, he found out that by the very persons to whom he had given an exhibition of the process of making lead pipe his idea had been used and improved upon.—Philadelpha Press.

Early Writers on Smoking.

The fact has been discovered that Shakspeare never mentions smoking or makes the slightest allusion to the habit. This is the more curious, as most of his contemporaries, Ben Jonson, Decker and others, discuss the then new fashion at length, and the humorist and satirist of the time lost no opportunity of deriding and making game of the votaries of the weed. The tobacco merchant was an important personage in the time of James I. The Elizabethan pipes were so small that when they are dug up in Ireland the poor call them "fairy pipes." King James himself was one of the most virulent opponents of the habit, and in his ludicrous "Counterblasts" calls it a vile and stinking custom, "borrowed from the beastly, slavish Indians—poor, wild, barbarous men—brought over from America and not introduced by any worthy or virtuous or great personage." He argues that tobacco is not dry and hot; that its smoke is humid, like all other smoke, and is therefore bad for the brain, which is naturally wet and cold. He denies that smoking purges the head or stomach, and declares that many have smoked themselves to death.—Medical Record.

Birth Rate of Males and Females.

Nature seems to be able to regulate the births of males and females without the help of German savants. It may be remembered that Buckle found that the average birth rate the world over was 21 boys to 20 girls, thus giving every Jill a chance for a Jack, after allowing for the greater death rate among males. The Springfield Republican is authority for the assertion that in Massachusetts for forty years the male birth rate relative to the female has not noticeably changed, the number of male births to each 1,000 female births in the last twenty years being 1,053 as compared with 1,059 for the preceding twenty years. In Europe observations covering ten years indicate an average of 1,060 males born to every 1,000 females, England being at one extreme, with 1,038, and Italy at the other, with 1,071.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

SPRAINS.

If Severe They Are More Serious than Simple Dislocations.

It is commonly said that a sprained joint is worse than a broken bone, and this is often true, for in a severe sprain the injury is really greater than in a simple fracture. The ankle is perhaps the most frequently sprained of all the joints, though the knee, elbow and wrist are also very liable to be injured, in falls especially.

A sprain of a joint varies greatly in severity; it may consist of a simple wrench, without the tearing of any of the ligaments, or it may be a more extensive injury, stopping just short of a dislocation.

In a moderately severe case one or more of the ligaments of the joint will be torn slightly, or possibly completely across; the membrane beneath the ligaments, which retains the lubricating fluid of the joint, will be ruptured, permitting the escape of more or less of this fluid into the parts about, and giving rise sometimes to a considerable swelling; this swelling may be increased also by an effusion of fluid into the joint, especially if inflammation sets in; and finally there is usually a slight, or even sometimes a quite pronounced, escape of blood into the tissues, and this, gradually working to the surface, appears as a black-and-blue stain.

In more severe cases the tendons passing over the joint and attaching the muscles which move it to the bones may suffer considerable damage, or one of them may be broken or torn from its attachment, bringing with it a sliver of bone. Where so much harm has been done to all the parts—bones, ligaments, tendons and muscles—it is easy to understand that much pain will result and that the cure will be tedious.

In the treatment of a sprain the first thing to be aimed at is to relieve pain and prevent inflammation, then to favor healing of the torn structures, and after that to restore the use of the limb.

The first of these objects is accomplished by absolute rest of the injured part, the limb being raised, and by lead and opium wash, a spirit lotion, or such other local applications as the physician may prescribe. Swelling is prevented in a measure, and pain is sometimes relieved, by firm bandaging with a flannel bandage.

When the swelling, heat and pain are gone, the limb should not be used too soon, but should be brought gradually back to health by cold douching, dry rubbing in a direction toward the body and passive motion. It is sometimes necessary in very severe cases to treat the sprain, by means of splints, exactly as if it were a fracture or dislocation.

Valuable Almanacs.

The most valuable almanac ever made is that now in the British Museum, which is priceless. It is believed to be at least 3,000 years old. The days are written in red ink on papyrus, in columns, and under each is a figure, followed by three characters signifying the probable state of the weather for that day. The most elaborate almanac in the world is that issued by the Chinese Government in twelve thick volumes, which gives full information as to lucky times and places for performing the acts of every-day life, which is considered an essential of success by every good Chinaman. The Nautical Almanac costs the British nation £3,942 a year. At its office, No. 3 Verulam buildings, Gray's Inn, London, the superintendent, A. M. W. Downing, doctor of science and fellow of the Royal Society, receives £600. Edward Roberts, fellow of the Royal Astronomical and Statistical societies, the chief assistant, receives £450, and there are eleven other assistants, several of whom are graduates of universities or members of learned societies, who are paid from £100 to £300 each. The most curious calendar at present in use is that of the natives of Central America, where the months are only twenty days, and these are named after animals. Among most modern European ones the "Almanac de Gotha" has been the longest in continuous circulation, upward of 135 years.—Boston Transcript.

Hocus-Pocus and That Sort of Thing

I saw a Hindoo out in the open street take three good-sized balls, larger and heavier than hens' eggs and commence tossing them up in the air, catching them as they returned. Soon his hands were motionless, but the balls kept ascending, and, so far as I know, are ascending still. They did not return. Were they dematerialized by some invisible psychic power? Such is my opinion.

During my stay in Madras there came down from a mountain a genuine psychic and seer. He was truly a venerable mystic. In a bungalow on a bright sunshiny day, 3 o'clock p. m., a dozen present, this old Yogi burned incense, repeated some Mantras, and said in substance: "Now I can move any object in this room by my will." Reflecting a few moments, I said: "Make the book lying on that stand move." Pointing his lean, bony finger toward it, he said: "Come, come!" The stand trembled, the book fell upon the floor, and slid to his feet. There was no hypnotism, no jugglery about this phenomenon. "Command those peacock plumes up there to come to you," I continued. Focusing his thought, his will, upon them, they leaped at his bidding from the case and, sailing around the room, fell at his feet. Other objects were moved in a similar manner. This was genuine white magic.—Humanitarian.

Beau Brummel's Grave.

In the Protestant cemetery at Caen, surrounded with yew and cypress trees, there is a tomb that has just been restored. The stone bears these words: "In memory of George Brummel, Esq., who departed this life on the 29th of March, 1840, aged 62 years." The tomb contains the remains of the noted favorite of George IV.

The Laziest People on Earth.

The laziest and dirtiest people in the world have recently been discovered in the Caucasus. They live in an inaccessible mountain range between the Black sea and the Caspian sea, and as they were 2,500 years ago so they are today. Seen from without, there is a certain picturesqueness about a Svanctian village, although it merely consists of miserable stone hovels without any attempt at form or adornment. Within the houses are inconceivably filthy. They are filled with rags, vermin and dirt of every description. They possess no fireplace or chimney. All the cooking, in fact, is done over a hole scooped out in the middle of the floor. In these houses men and women and children are huddled together. During the long winter months they are shut in for days at a time, the cattle often sharing their quarters. Every aperture has to be closed on account of the cold. This long imprisonment is perhaps the cause of the degradation of the people. Horrible diseases result from it, which are aggravated by an abnormal consumption of arrack, the strong distilled drink of the Asiatics. Besides this, it is an invariable rule to make four days a week holidays, with saints' days as extras. Since they have adopted the holidays of every other country with which they have been in contact, it is not surprising that the men find little time for work. Farming, bee culture and cattle breeding are the only industries of these people, while throughout their territory there is not a single manufactured article.—New York Ledger.

BILLS OF FARE IN FASHIONABLE RESTAURANTS.

The question has been mooted over and over again whether the engrafting of French and German dishes upon the bills of fare of the better class of American restaurants is or is not an improvement. Many pretend that before their introduction our cooking was coarse, but basic. This is an open question, but no bill of fare presents attractions to the dyspeptic, but they, like the bilious, malarious persons with weak kidneys, can be cured by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

Stop! Women,

And consider that in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience in treating woman's diseases is greater than that of any living physician, male or female.

You can talk freely to a woman when it is revolting to relate your private troubles to a man; besides, a man does not understand, simply because he is a man.

MRS. PINKHAM'S STANDING INVITATION.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read, and answered by women only. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman. Thus has been established the eternal confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Out of the vast volume of experience which she has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge that will help your case. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has relieved thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance.

WHAT THEY DO.

All night long the little stars blink;
All night long they twinkle and wink;
All night long, when we're fast asleep,
Through the cracks in the shutters they peep, peep, peep.
But what do they do when the daylight comes?

When the sun wakes up and his big, round eye
Stares and stares at the big, round sky,
The little stars nestle right down in their nest,
And their bright eyes close, while they rest, rest, rest,
And that's what they do when the daylight comes.

All day long in the warm summer time,
The posies blossom and creep and climb;
All summer long when the south winds blow,
They nod their heads and they grow, grow, grow,
But where do they go when Jack Frost comes?

They wrap themselves in their faded gowns,
And they take a trip to the rootlet towns,
When the icicle fringes begin to grow
And the air is full of the snow, snow, snow,
And that's where they go when Jack Frost comes.

And the little ones chatter the whole day long,
Of building and weaving and lesson and song.
All day long in the merriest way,
They laugh, and they work, and they play, play, play,
But what do they do when the Dreamman comes?

They nod and forget all their joys and cares;
And they fold their hands, and they say their prayers;
And under the blankets they gladly creep,
And they close their eyes, and they sleep, sleep, sleep,
And that's what they do when the Dreamman comes.

HER UNAVAILING SACRIFICE.

IT was very quiet, very tranquil, in barracks that day, and from the deserted grounds, where only a solitary sentry or two paced up and down, none of the usual barrack-room talk, laughter, or singing could be heard. For every soldier, band-man, and officer had been called to the officers' police quarters, where a fellow-soldier was being tried for his life by the court-martial. It was during the revolutionary days, when power was vested in the hands of the military. They had the right to say whether or not Private Santiago Moreno was guilty of manslaughter, and whether, in payment thereof, he should die.

No women were present in the grim, fortress-like quarters; only the soldiers who stood in silent, stern rows around the room. On the dais sat the colonel, the mayor, and some lesser officers; fronting them, straight and erect, with shoulders thrown back, stood the prisoner, Santiago Moreno. He was a good-looking fellow, and the star on his uniform lapel showed that he had received credit "for valor in the field." Not a flicker of an eyelid, not a movement, showed what he felt; there was not even a tremor when the colonel, after long and grave discussion, at the last stood up, with the other officers grouped about him, and pronounced the sentence of death—"that on the morning of the following day, Private Santiago Moreno would be escorted to the plains of San Geronimo, and there be put by the ley de fuga to death." That was all. The prisoner drew himself up, and saluted, his face no more concerned than that of the men about him, and was taken to his cell.

The soldiers melted away, group by group, some of them displaying sorrow, some unconcern, and others anger. For the slaying of his companion-in-arms by Private Moreno had been a very cold-blooded and more than usually wicked deed, even in a country where wicked deeds are common. For with deliberate intention Moreno had waited for the other, after parting with his sweetheart, Pancha, and coolly and methodically bored a dagger straight to his heart. For it he had offered no excuse or defense, stating merely that the murdered soldier had "annoyed Panchita; that a caballero cannot allow such a thing as the molesting of his novia."

In his small stone cell—once the room set apart for those about to suffer in the auto da fe of the inquisition days—Private Moreno walked about, whistling a gay Mexican danza, hunting the while for writing materials. He wanted to write adios to his sweetheart, he stated lightly to the warder, who was eying him warily, one hand on his pistol. Though Moreno might not be armed, he was a man to be watched. But at the prisoner's wish to write a note to Panchita, the warder's face relaxed, and he offered to find pencil and paper. For Panchita was his own cousin, and every one loved the gay, pretty girl, with her artless, innocent ways that had lured two men on to death.

Poor little Panchita! Five minutes after the death sentence had been pronounced, she knew of it, and, her door locked, was lying face downward on the cold stone floor, moaning and crying to the Virgin for help. It had all been her fault, as she knew—through her two men would go to puratory, and how would she answer for them?

On the shrine before her, decked out in blue and white, was a tiny, yellow image of the Christ, with blood-stained body and hands. Underneath Him hung the holy pictured face of the Virgin, and to the two, Panchita, weak and faint from long fasting and crying, was pouring out heart and soul. Only that Santiago—her Santiago—might be saved somehow—in some way. Ay buen Dios—Marie madre de Dios—take her life—her soul for torture in purgatory—only let Santiago escape! Too weak to pray aloud, she had crawled before the shrine, and with burning, tear-covered face was faintly whispering her petitions.

The girl drew herself up numbly on her knees, sobs that came from her very soul still shaking her slender body. A sound outside startled her, until she remembered that Santiago's mother had come to weep and lament with her own mother. Out there, in the patio, they were lamending and wailing with loud cries. How could they do it like that—wailing and shrieking so that the neighbors could hear? How angry Santiago would be if he could hear them making such a noise over him! She cast one more pitiful glance at the Virgin, but the sweet, calm face was so quiet, so restful, so little disturbed. What was the use to ask her anything? No, there was no help. She stood up, tottering, and moved over to the window. There was no one in sight; the hot sunshine poured down on the yellow sandy street and the gray adobe walls. Out in the middle of the callejon some dogs and small children rolled and tumbled in the dust together in high glee. A burro, with melancholy face and long, drooping ears, munched alfalfa, while his owner drank pulque in the pulque-shop near by. It was all so ordinary, so everyday; and yet Santiago was to be shot to-morrow! That is, unless she could think of a plan to save him.

There was a sudden clatter, and the children scattered rapidly, with many duckings and bobbings of their small, fat bodies, as good Padre Francisco, on his pacing mare, turned the corner and went rapidly down the street. Behind him rode a mozo on a hacienda horse. Panchita thought dully that some one at the pulque hacienda of San Juan must be very ill and wanted the padre for confession. It would be a long ride for the good old man, because San Juan was many miles away. He would be absent from the town for over a day.

Pulling at the strings of his soutane, Padre Francisco rode on, his old black cloak flapping in the breeze. It was so old and shabby that even Panchita's dim eyes could not but remark it. Poor Padre Francisco, with no one to look after his clothes—he was a good man, and really deserved a better cloak than that shabby thing! Perhaps, if she asked her father, he would allow her to take the cloak that had belonged to her uncle, a priest of the same order as Padre Francisco, to give to the latter good man. And the hood that the padre wore, covering his head and nearly all his face—was ever anything seen like it? One could, of a surety, wear it to a masquerade; perhaps she might borrow it for the next "Baile de Mascaros." At the thought she laughed and choked—it would be a good disguise.

The next moment she was weeping her heart out, pressing passionate kisses on the cold feet of the ivory Christ. He had heard her, after all, and the Virgin had helped her—interceded for her! For now she knew what to do, and Santiago should be saved. There was a plan—the Holy Mother had sent it to her. Now to carry it out.

At 6 o'clock that evening the soldier on guard before Santiago's door admitted without question the thin, stooped form of Padre Francisco, cloaked and hooded in his usual manner, and carrying prayer-books and rosary. The good father was silently telling his beads, and the soldier bowed humbly and crossed himself as he opened the door, speaking no word. For no Catholic is privileged to address a priest who is counting his rosary-beads—it is a sign that silence is desired.

The cell door opened and closed silently after the padre, and the watches outside heard a smothered, impatient ejaculation from Private Moreno, who was smoking a cigarette and trying to write that adios to Panchita. Then the door was locked, for the padre was going to confess the prisoner, and the guards retired, laughing at the idea of confession for Santiago—the wickedest dog in the army of Mexico.

Lounging in the doorway, the soldiers speculated lazily as to what was going on in the condemned cell, it was so quiet. Not even a murmur could be heard, and finally the men agreed that the padre was praying silently, with Santiago cursing in the other corner of the room.

It was dark—quite dark—when Padre Francisco came out, with head bowed lower than ever, cloak wrapped disconsolately about him, and fingers still telling his beads. He had been there for an hour, and surely Santiago was either talked down or dead by this time. "Shall we go and see?" asked a guard.

"No, hombre; let the poor brute alone," said another.

To the men who watched all night for fear that the prisoner might escape, it seemed a century before midnight gave way to the darkness that comes before dawn, though to the prisoner—quien sabe! Such waiting is hard even on the men who are not to die, and there was a sound of relief when at last the first bugle sounded! It was time to get the prisoner and march. Because a soldier is allowed two privileges—to be executed before dawn, and to be shot in his uniform. There was no need to change the clothes of Private Santiago Moreno; so far as costume was concerned, he was ready.

In front of the prison, stiffly drawn up into line, in the darkness, stood the squad of the Twenty-third (Private Moreno's own regiment), who were to attend to the "law of fire," and in the corridor waited impatiently the two guards who were detailed to walk on either side of him. The prisoner, however, was not ready; and deep disgust and scorn was shown on every face when the warder appeared and stated grimly that the prisoner was weeping como un nino, and had begged one moment's grace. Weeping, indeed! A pretty way for a soldier of the Twenty-third to die! And men who had thought privately that they would aim low in the ley de fuga, hardened their hearts—a coward did not deserve such treatment.

That the prisoner, barely visible in the gray dawn, was perfectly calm and composed when he did appear made no difference to them; perhaps he had mustered up some courage, after his weeping, but he had played the coward for all that, and a coward's death was no loss.

Out on the bare, swampy plains of San Geronimo, just where Mount Ajusco rises up bleak and rock-covered, was the place of execution. The walk was not long for the men, to the sound of the muffled marcha, but very dreary. There was hardly light enough to see each other's faces, and the trees and cactus shrubs loomed up gray and ghostly along the side of the rocky trail. As for the condemned man, though he might have played the part of a coward in the prison, there was no sign of fear now. With quick, light steps, almost out-distancing the regular pace of the others, he walked out bravely, as though going to another decoration by el presidente, instead of to the death of a murderer, at the hands of the very men with whom he had fought at Matanzas, and Huelle and other places, arm to arm, back to back.

Here was the spot. And, with his back to Ajusco, his feet sinking into the damp ground, and the gray mist of the morning resting like a pall about him, the prisoner was allowed to stand for a moment, while the Captain made a brief address, concluding with the statement that only because the prisoner was a soldier the "law of fire" would be put into effect; when the word "uno" was pronounced he was to run for his life. On the craggy side of Ajusco, he might find shelter, perhaps. "Uno—dos—tres" would be counted; at "tres" the squad would fire. Therefore he would have to hasten—otherwise, God have mercy on his soul.

"Atencion!" The soldiers stood on guard.

"Uno!" was counted slowly. The prisoner stood stock still, and the man nearest swore that there was a smile on his face. "Dos!"—(Dios de la vida, was he paralyzed, that he could not run, even to save his life?)—and at last, slowly, "Tres! Fire!"

Motionless, horrified, the men had watched. Still the prisoner stood there, head up and shoulders back. At the sound of the "tres," however, muskets were lowered, and every hammer pulled. Out thundered the salute of bullets, a veritable hail of them, and the solitary, pathetic figure tottered, then reeled over, face downward, in the damp grass. Dead, of course—how could it be otherwise? The Captain should have looked to make sure, but he wanted his breakfast and some cognac; merely glancing casually at the body, he gave the order to march, and with the marcha once more ringing out the men tramped back through the light of the coming day to barracks and breakfast, leaving the dead man alone on the plain.

The next day Private Santiago Moreno himself, whom we have seen shot and left dead on the San Geronimo plains, was there at sunset, pale, crazed with grief, and holding in his arms a dead body in the uniform of a soldier, but with the sweet, peaceful face of a woman who had offered up her life for a friend. When the sun went down his lifeless form remained, still clasping—even in death—the other body that had been thought his.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Resent Being Made a Show.

"The Steerage of To-day" is the title of an article by H. Phelps Whitmarsh in the Century. Mr. Whitmarsh says: One evening several members of steerage No. 1 and I were grouped about the foremast, talking upon the all-absorbing subject, America. The conversation drifted into an argument on the equality of man, and this, in turn, led to a discussion as to the rights of the saloon passengers.

"If we ain't got no right to go into their quarters," said one of the men, "wot right 'ave they to come into ours? It 'u'd be all right if they be'aved themselves; but they don't, blast 'em! Anybody 'd think as 'ow we was a lot of bloomin' lepers, to see the way they carries on—a-'oldin' 'andkerchiefs to their noses, an' a-droring their silk petticoats close to 'em, an' tiptoin' an' titterin'. 'Ho, George,' says the big woman with diamonds in 'er ears, as come down yesterday; 'the pore, bloomin' creechahs; but wot makes 'em smell so?' Just as loud as that, mind you. S' 'elp me, I could 'a' tore 'er to pieces!"

As I happened to witness the incident so graphically described by the cockney, I could not help feeling that his anger was righteous.

Measuring Tapes Made of Steel.

Steel tapes for measuring are made in lengths varying from three to 1,000 feet. Tapes of 1,000 feet in length are made only one-eighth of an inch in width, so as to save weight, and are usually made to order. Tapes of great length are used in bridge and railroad work and in measuring streams. Sometimes two 1,000-foot tapes are joined in measuring.

RICH ISLAND GROUP.

THE ORIENTAL COLONY WHICH IS LOST TO SPAIN.

The Islanders, Their Natural Wealth and Their Love of Loafing and Smoking—Manila, Its Antiquities, Dirty Streets and Variety of Evil Odors.

The Philippines.

The victory of the American fleet at Manila awakened interest in the rich islands which that victory has taken from Spain. The Philippines have been a Spanish colony ever since their conquest in 1565, which was effected by a fleet bearing an armed force from the western coast of Mexico. The Spaniards did not accomplish their conquest without difficulty, for, although the natives were poorly armed, having only the weapons common to savage peoples throughout the world, they made a stout resistance, and all the military strength and strategy of the Spaniards were needed in order to subdue them. The islanders have since shown, by oft-repeated insurrections, their objection to Spanish rule, and between 1565 and the insurrection of the present year it is said there has hardly been a decade in which Spanish troops have not been called upon to pacify one or another of the disturbed provinces.

LOCATION OF THE PHILIPPINES.

A WEALTHY NATIVE'S RESIDENCE.

There are 1,200 islands in the Philippine group, the greater number of which, however, are mere dots or islets, inhabited by only a few families. Insignificant as are most of these, the larger islands are of very respectable dimensions, the total area of the entire group being 116,000 square miles. The islands are all of volcanic origin and each has a mountain range. The largest volcano on the islands is Mount Mayon, which travelers describe as being most beautifully situated. It is a perfect cone. There are few large rivers, but many small ones. It rains considerably in the islands and rainfalls are exceedingly heavy, a fall of eight inches in twenty-four hours having frequently been noted.

A torrid heat prevails all the year round. The mean annual temperature of Manila is about 90 degrees, which indicates that in summer the thermometer stands above 100 regularly every day, and hugs the century mark pretty closely during the night. Even in what is called the winter season a temperature of 65 to 85 degrees prevails, so that a Philippine winter would be deemed a tolerably warm American summer. The heat is rendered almost unendurable by the moisture in the atmosphere [illegible] year's end, the air is almost saturated; the perspiration of the body does not dry, but stands in large drops, which fall off on the slightest movement. The heat is so intense in summer that Europeans frequently tumble over with heat apoplexy. Even the Spaniards do their business in the early hours, whiling away the heat of the day in sleep. Late in the afternoon Manila begins to awaken.

The group is rendered a valuable possession from the fertility of the soil and the variety and abundance of its products. Despite the fact that the natives work only under the most urgent provocation, and then only for so long a time as may be necessary to satisfy their simple wants, the plantations of the island produce an immense wealth. The government reports of 1894, the latest available, declared the exports of the islands to be $32,000,000, while the imports were $28,000,000, chiefly of rice, flour, wine, dry goods, petroleum and coal; the exports were of hemp and its manufactures, sugar, coffee, tobacco leaf, cigars and indigo. How greatly the amount of exports might be increased under a proper form of government which did not tax the energy and almost the life out of the people cannot be conjectured, but it is certain that with proper encouragement the Philippine Islanders would become an industrious and wealthy people.

A Mixed People.

The population of the Philippines is probably the worst mixed of any group of islands, even in that part of the world. The islands lie about midway between the continents of Asia and Australia. The Negritos, or aborigines, are closely analogous to the natives of New Guinea and Australia. But the Negritos, long before the coming of the Europeans, had become an unimportant factor in the population, having been driven back into the interior and mountainous portions of the islands by the Malays. When Magellan discovered the islands, in 1521, he found all the coasts settled by Malays. But the Malay Indians by no means monopolized the better parts of the islands, for among them there was a large admixture of Chinese, Japanese, Hindus, Siamese and other Asiatic coast races and tribes, so that the Malays themselves were a sort of composite race. To the present day the heterogeneousness of the population continues, and although the Spanish have political control of the islands, only about 5,000 of these foreigners, and they chiefly officeholders, are to be found on the entire group. The fewness of the number of their conquerors naturally serves as a constant irritation to the natives; that 5,000 strangers should rule, with despotic power, a population variously estimated at between 9,000,000 and 11,000,000 is not to be endured even by ignorant Indians.

A PRINCIPAL STREET IN MANILA.

The city of Manila is a typical eastern metropolis. It is on the east side of a wide bay, which furnishes a tolerable anchorage, but not a secure place of refuge for shipping. The city itself is, as in most eastern centers of trade, divided into a new and an old town, the latter being fortified with walls in mediaeval style, and containing warehouses, storehouses, offices and an enormous native population, while the new town, [illegible] with edifices [illegible] section, [illegible] which during the rainy season becomes a mighty torrent, runs through the heart of the town and divides the two sections. The old town has narrow streets, badly paved, reasonably filthy, well provided with varieties of odors, teeming with East Indians of every age, color and previous condition of dirtiness, whose principal occupation seems to be keeping out of the sun, smoking cigarettes and chewing betel nut. In the interval of smoking they load and unload the vessels, most of the native population finding its employment about the shipping, while those not thus engaged have all the occupation they want at their homes, in the manufacture of the coarse goods known as manilla bagging and sacking and in the making of cigars, of which many millions are annually exported to China and India.

TOWN OF CAVITE, NEAR WHICH DEWEY'S FLEET ANCHORED.

Manila affords the stranger many interesting sights, not the least among which are the street cars, in which everybody—men and women—smokes. A car is usually drawn by a single pony managed by two drivers. One beats the pony and the other holds the reins and blows a tin horn. On the rear platform stands a pompous conductor, who collects a copper all around every time the car passes a section post. These section posts are somewhat less than a mile apart. The conductor is particularly careful to look after the due balance of a car, fore and aft. He will not allow more to stand on one platform than on the other. If there are eight in front and six in the rear, or vice versa, somebody has to stumble through the car from the heavier end to the lighter. This precaution is necessary to prevent derailments. Other precautions still more necessary are omitted. Thus, a woman carrying a little small-pox patient is as welcome as any one else.

The villages consist of collections of huts made of wattles and reeds, thatched with grass. The native naturally feels more secure in these than he would in houses of stone, brick or wood. Earthquakes and typhoons are common. The grass hut can stand the heaviest earthquake shock, and the tremors which bring down a stone building in ruins do not affect the slender structure. When an earthquake occurs, as it does in some portions of the islands from two to seven times a week, the native is amused to see the Europeans jump up and run en dishabille out of their homes for fear the walls will fall upon them, sits under his grass roof and enjoys the sensation, for even if his home does fall he crawls out from under his load of hay, and with the assistance of his wife and neighbors sets up the poles and recommences housekeeping, as though nothing had happened.

One of the worst features of cockfighting, outside of its innate brutality, is the betting, universal among the spectators of the game. The sums staked are often very high, and their payment, which is rarely shirked, may involve the ruin of the loser.

PAID HIS BILLS IN FIGHTS.

Debtor Whips a Landlord and Lawyer Until They Call It Even.

In relating a fight he once had with a man from Illinois, S. H. Piles, of Paducah, says: "At that time I lived in Smithland. W. P. Fowler was judge, I was sheriff, J. W. Code was clerk, Blount Hodge was there and Ben Barnes, Dr. Sanders, T. C. Leech, Judge Bennet, J. W. Bush and many others of the old-timers lived there then. I kept a hotel called the Waverly House. The man from Illinois put up with me. I gave him one of the best rooms. He stayed several days. I got uneasy about my bill and asked him for it. He said that I was in a h—l of a hurry, and that he would pay it whenever he got ready. I very foolishly told him that if he did not pay me right then I would take it out of his hide. He pulled off his coat and said he was ready to settle, and we went at it. We fought for some time, and I thought I had whipped him, but I am sorry to say that I was mistaken.

"He resisted a short time and jumped on me again. When we fought out this round I again thought I had whipped him, but alas! I was again mistaken, for he rested for a time and came at me again. By this time I was very tired of the fight. He got me down on the floor, and after thinking about it for years, I think I was whipped. When he let me get up I told him he did not owe me one cent, and could stay at the Waverly House free of charge as long as he wanted to. This man from Illinois had a lawsuit in our court, and David Greer was his lawyer. David had the suit up in nice shape, and expected a big fee, but, alas for David! This man from Illinois, flushed with victory after getting through with me, concluded to settle with David as he had with me. He went to David's office and told him he had settled his bill with Sam Piles, and now he was ready to pay him his fee in the same way. David got up out of his chair and backed himself up in the corner and told the man from Illinois that he did not owe him one cent, and also told him that if it would be unpleasant for him to stay longer with me that he could go home with him and it would cost him nothing to stay as long as he desired to; but the man from Illinois had not completed his mission at Smithland as yet. He owed Tom Robertson a livery stable bill; he called on him to settle. Tom told him he owed him nothing. He then called on Mr. Cade, and he told him the same thing.

"The last time I heard from this man from Illinois was that he was fighting the livery stable man at New Liberty, Ill., to get his horse out of the stable without pay, and he did so."

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, JULY 8 1898

From the Bridgeport Chronicle-Union we clip the following history of the Broder case:

"On Saturday last the Supreme Court rendered two decisions in the case of Broder vs. Conklin, affirming the decision of Superior Judge Virden of this county in each case. Over 19 years ago John Broder went through insolvency in Inyo county, and his property, consisting principally of lands and a few cattle, was sold at public auction in one lot for $2,500 to A. R. Conklin, who was the attorney for the Assignee, such property not being worth as much in Inyo county as it is now. Mr. Conklin sold the cattle, but retained the lands until his death a year ago. Many of Broder's creditors were at the sale, and no objections were made to the purchase except that two or three asked him to buy it for the benefit of the creditors, which he refused to do, telling them if they wanted it to bid on it, but none would do it. He held the real estate and made what he could out of it by renting and through the increase in value in later years. Soon after the sale a portion of the creditors were induced to believe that because Conklin had been the attorney for the assignee he could not purchase and hold the property as his own, and that under the law he became a trustee for the creditors of the insolvent Broder, and must account to them. In March, 1886, R. S. Miner, acting as attorney for the creditors, commenced suit against Judge Conklin to have the trust declared and established. Conklin filed a demurrer, which was sustained by Judge Hannah of Inyo. Mr. Miner refused to amend the complaint and appealed to the Supreme Court which reversed Judge Hannah. The case then lingered on demurrer and otherwise until the summer of 1890, when it was tried by Judge Rooney of Tuolumne county, Judge Gill of Inyo being disqualified. Judge Rooney rendered an interlocutory judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, but for some unexplained cause it was not file dantil one day after the expiration of Judge Rooney's term of office. In the beginning of 1891 the plaintiff had the case transferred from Inyo to Mono county, and Judge Vernen was asked to declare Judge Rooney's decision a final judgment so that an appeal could be taken to the Supreme Court, but he refused to do so, but on motion of the defendant the Rooney judgment was set aside and delared void on the ground that it was not enietred until after Rooney had retired from office, then this decision on appeal was taken to the Supreme Court which sustained Judge Virden. The plaintiff then moved to have Virden enter Judgment on the findings of Judge Rooney, and this he refused to do, and the Supreme Court was asked for a writ of mandate to compel him to enter judgment as asked for, and Virden was again sustained. A writ of prohibition was then applied for by the plaintiff to prevent his setting the case for trial de novo, which he was about to do. This writ was also denied and Judge Virden was again sustained. The defendant then asked for an order for the payment to the receiver in the case of some $2,700, rents deposited in the Court. This motion Judge Virden granted, and another appeal was promptly taken by plaintiff from the order. The case was then tried before Judge Virden and submitted, and after a careful examination of all the evidence the Judge was very reluctantly forced to the conclusion that Rooney's decision was wrong and not supported by the facts, and fearless in what he believed was right, gave judgment for Conklin, and from this final judgment also her appeal was taken, with the result that the Supreme Court has again fully sustained him in both of the two last appeals. The case has been most bitterly prosecuted and defended from its commencement to its ending, and Judge Virden's rulings have been most unreasonably commended on by the attorney for the plaintiff and his supporters., but his complete vindication has come at last by the final affirmation of all his ruling and judgments. This decision also completely vindicates and lifts the cloud of doubt from the life and character of the late Judge Conklin, a matter of heartfelt rejoicing for the widow and children, besides reflecting proud credit upon the firm of Reddy, Campbell & Metson, who so ably conducted the case. We congratulate everybody that the case is ended.

FASHION AND FABRIC.

French ecru is the fashionable tint in laces this season.

White pongee is one of the materials used for yachting gowns.

The hat which turns back froms the face is the latest Parisian fancy.

Rumor says that white skirts will soon oust the silk ones from favor.

Red and dark heliotrope forms one of the season's combinations of color.

A sash of black spangled tulle is very effective on a gown of some pale tint.

The gray faded shades of blue, red and brown are the popular colors for gowns.

A Roman sash with silk hose to match will add much to your white organdie costume.

Sapphire blue velvet and turquoise blue silk are used in combination to form the vest of a tan cloth gown.

Some of the newest coats are quite long in the back, rounding down from the front, and fastened a little to one side.

Black silk coats made by the tailors and stitched and pressed in the most approved fashion are one of the Parisian novelties.

The daintiest petticoats for summer wear are made of pink and blue batiste, with embroidered flounces for trimming.

White barege over white taffeta and trimmed with white satin ribbon and white chiffon makes a lovely summer dress.

The latest linen collar has pointed tab ends standing up at the back and a turnover finish in front, which folds down over the cravat.

Silk muslin is the material for the hot weather shirt waists, which are made with the inevitable tucked chemisette and collar band of mull.

The Greek peplum is revived in a modified form for the tea gown and demidress costumes, and transparent materials which display the figure to good advantage are favored.

The latest thing in belts to wear with shirt waists is a soft taffeta ribbon, five inches wide, made tight enough to wrinkle into half that width and fastened with a pretty silver gilt buckle.

The mushroom hat with a low crown and a brim that curves down all around is one of the many shapes which have some merit as a protection for the eyes. It is trimmed simply or elaborately with flowers and is charming on a young girl.—New York Sun.

MILITARY SPAIN.

Spain has a permanent army, an active reserve and a sedentary reserve.

Spain's frontier is completely protected by a cordon of forts and fortified towns.

Spain's standing army always numbers about 70,000. Recently it has numbered about 100,000, mostly boys.

A Spaniard drafted for war at home can secure exemption on payment of $300; if drafted for colonial service, the cost is $400.

During the Napoleonic wars Bonaparte gave orders to the French fleet that two Spanish vessels should always be counted as equal to one French ship

In the year before Spain's war with Cuba began the government took in about $1,800,000 from drafted men who purchased exemption. In the first year of the war the figure rose to $5,400,000.

FICKLE FRANCE.

It is a curious fact that when France was a monarchy it was the friend of the United States and has become its enemy only since it adopted a republican form of government.—Kansas City Star.

The spectacle of the French republic aiding a decaying monarchy in enslaving its subjects is quite as interesting as her alliance with the most powerful despotism of Europe.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

In the matter of the Estate of Edwin M. Crocker, Deceased.

James R. Moffett, the administrator of the estate of Edwin M. Crocker, deceased, having filed his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of sale of all the personal property and the real estate of said decedent, for the purposes therein set forth

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, JULY 8 1898

Al e.t Lewis came up on Tuesday.

The postoffice at Aberdeen has been discontinued.

District Attorney Forbes spent the Fourth at Bishop.

Carl Walters has accepted a position in Eibeshutz's store.

Ben and Rob Hoskins spent the Fourth at Independence.

The Fourth of July Committee has $4 left after paying all expenses.

Geo. Montgomery and wife are expected up from Ballarat this week.

Dr. J. S. McQueen came down from Bishop last Friday and is stopping at the Norman house.

The Reward mine resumes operations this week. Owing to the scarcity of water the mill will remain idle.

Mr. and Mrs. Max Skinner came up from Randsburg last week and will spend the summer in Owens Valley.

Mr. and Mrs. George Bixby left for Monache last Tuesday. Mr. Bixby has taken a band of 300 horses over there for the remainder of the summer.

Dave Johnson received this week a number of pen drawings executed by his 14-year old brother back in Kentucky. The work shows artistic ability of the very highest order, and many a newspaper illustrator would have a hard task to equal it.

THE FOURTH

The Fourth of July has come and gone, and is now only a pleasant memory. The local population were brought to realize its arrival at the first break of day by an anvil salute fired by Col. J. W. Murphy, who sat up all the previous night preparing his artillery. A little later he snap of the firecracker in the hands of the small boy added to the din.

The day was pleasant excepting a very strong wind, which materially interfered with the exercises in the court house grove. About noon this died down, and the sky became overcast with clouds, which made the afternoon a perfect one for the sports.

The exercises in the forenoon were well attended. The singing and recitations were good, and the oration by S. E. Vermilyea was heartily applauded. Then everyone turned to and enjoyed the feast spread by the ladies, and if anyone went away hungry they had only themselves to blame. Even the noble red man had his "innards" lined with the good things of civilization.

After the people had returned from the picnic the sports commenced. The track was marked out in front of Rhine's store, and the finishing point was in front of the Norman House. The races opened with a footrace, 50 yards, for boys under 12, for a purse of $3, which was won by Harold Baxter.

The second event was a 50 yard race for girls under 12, purse $3. Dora Schabbel won, with Ruth Mulholland a close second.

The next was a race for boys under 15, 150 yards, for $3, which was won by Val Gorman.

The egg race was won by Wallie Hodge.

Then came the potato race. This brought out some good talent and some lively scrambling after the spuds. Ivah Bell won the V.

The next event was a sack race, free for all. This was very closely contested, resulting in a tie between Ivan Bunney and Harry Bart.

Then the larger boys prepared for the three-leg race. This was a difficult race to run, besides being the hardest kind of work. The race was declared a tie between Vernon Smith and Lester Laird and Walter Grindley and Johnny Ramsey and was contested the second time, Smith and Laird winning by a nose.

The next was a 50 yard race for little tots under six years. Walter Levy was the favorite in the betting, and was expected to walk away with the prize, but on the home stretch Harry Jiggins spurted ahead and finished strong, winning by several feet.

The free for all, 100-yard dash, was won by Paul Mairs.

The Indian pony race was exciting, and a little bay mustang belonging to Crippled Hand George, and ridden by a diminutive Piute brave, won by a length.

The last was an impromtu 100-yard race, and was the prettiest race of the day, Harry Burt and George Day keeping almost exactly even from start to finish, Day winning by a couple of inches.

The tug of war was omitted.

The ball in the evening was well attended and thoroughly enjoyed.

NOTES.

There were no casualties, and the local medicos looked discouraged.

The small boy and his firecracker were everywhere.

The toy pistol was conspicuous by its absence.

Harry Cook as master of ceremonies was the right man in the right place.

The sprinting match between F. McIvor and Omie Mairs, ¼ mile for a purse of 80 cents, was postponed indefinitely, the contestants being unable to agree upon a stakeholder.

The talent opened their eyes when little "Jiggy" began to sprint.

Col. Murphy remembered the Maine by putting an extra spoonful of powder in the last anvil.

The holiday attire of the Piute braves was a treat to anyone with an eye for color.

Doc McQueen has a leaning toward white vests. Ben Yandell isn't so particular.

The Fourth at Lone Pine.

LONE PINE, July 6, 1898.

ED. INDEPENDENT — The citizens of Lone Pine, feeling the general enthusiasm and patriotism pervading the hearts of every citizen of the United States celebrated the anniversary of the declaration of our independence in a most enthusiastic and patriotic manner.

At 9:30 a.m. the new flag presented to the town by the citizens of Lone Pine was raised with appropriate exercises. Mrs. A. T. Stewart raised the flag while the song "Flag of Our Nation," was rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Washburn, Miss Matie Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Laberge, Mrs. T. Richards and F. P. Meysan. Then a few remarks were made by F. B. Stewart in honor of the occasion, followed by the Star Spangled Banner by the singers.

The crowd immediately marched to the grove, where the celebration was continued. Prayer was given by the Rev. Washburn, a solo, "The Red, White and Blue," was rendered by Miss Matie Johnson in a manner which stirred the hearts and quickened the pulse beat of every patriotic citizen present, all joining in the chorus.

The declaration of independence, read by Mrs. Washburn was a masterful rendition.

The orator of the day, Fred B. Stewart, entertained the company with an oration that was well written and delivered in a fine, masterly manner.

The exercises were closed by singing America.

A. C. Harvey as President of the Day carried all before him and everything went smoothly.

The lunch table fairly groaned beneath the good things. Enough and to spare for all.

In the evening we danced, music being furnished by Messrs. Cruz and Celayo. Dancing went on merrily till daylight warned us that we had better start for home, as breakfast would soon be ready. The supper at the Whitney House was well attended by the dancers.

C. Carrasco at the dance gave an address to and for the flag that stirred all with enthusiasm.

A few of our George's Creek neighbors aided us in our celebration. Thanks, George's Creek. We will return the compliment. LONE PINER.

WAR NEWS.

On July 4 Secretary Long received the following dispatch from Admiral Sampson: "The fleet under my command offers the nation as a Fourth of July present the destruction of the whole of Cevera's fleet. No one escaped. It attempted to escape at 9:30 a.m., and at 2 p.m. the last the Cristobal Colon, had been run ashore six miles west of Santiago and had let down her colors. The Infanta Marie Teresa, Oquenda and Vizcaya were forced ashore, burned and blown up within twenty miles of Santiago; the Furor and Pluton were destroyed within four miles of the port. Loss 1 killed and two wounded. The enemy's loss probably several hundred from gun fire, explosions and drowning. About 1,00 prisoners, including Admiral Cervera."

It is officially announced that Watson's fleet will sail at once for the coast of Spain.

The Charleston and the first fleet of transports have reached Manila. The Ladrone Islands were captured on the way, and the Spanish governor and other officials were taken to Manila as prisoners of war.

The Hist, Hornet and Wampatuck of the mosquito fleet engaged nine Spanish gunboats and succeeded in destroying two and disabling three more.

A teriffic land battle was fought near Santiago. The loss on both sides was heavy, that of the Americans reaching well up into the hundreds.

As we go to press the news comes that Camara's fleet has passed through the Suez canal en route for the Phillipines. Hobson and his men have been exchanged and are now with Sampson.

Admiral Bunce Praises Women.

The Brooklyn navy yard was a busy place when a reporter called there to ask Admiral Bunce, the commandant, what part he thought women would play in war.

"You want to know how women can make themselves useful," he said. "Well, how can they not be useful? It seems to me that they are always doing things that make them an extremely important factor in the world's affairs. I know what the horrors as well as the sinews of war are, and I say that we cannot overestimate the service of women in times of war.

"A few bright, cheery, good women will do more to keep civilization and chivalry alive in a camp than any number of rules or regulations. Their ministerings will make victory brighter, defeat easier and death less horrible."—New York Tribune.

Movement Against Foot Binding.

A strong sentiment against foot binding is beginning to make itself felt in China even in the most exclusive circles. A short time ago ten Chinese women of the highest social position in Shanghai invited the officers of the Natural Foot society, an organization of foreign women, to a public dinner, and a return invitation soon followed. At both these functions there was much discussion of the best way of abolishing the custom of foot binding. Since then the Natural Foot society has had a public meeting, at which the Chinese Anti-foot Binding society was represented. The latter organization is composed of men of high standing and great influence, and they intend to petition the emperor for the enforcement of an ancient law against foot binding.

Woman Cod Fisher.

Mrs. William Champlin of Montauk has just made for herself a record as a cod fisher. Her husband, who is engaged in the cod fishing business off Montauk, has usually been accompanied on his trips by another bay man. A short time ago he was taken sick, and Mrs. Champlin volunteered to fill his place as "second man" in the boat. Her husband was rather dubious as to her ability to fill the bill, but she was not to be daunted.

She donned the attire of a fisherman and set out with her husband's partner. The day was spent in fishing, and when they returned to the beach the couple had caught together a total of 175 fish.

Noted Women and Marriage.

Noted women have shown no precocious desire to wed and make homes of their own. George Eliot was nearer 40 than 30 when she married for the first time and close upon 60 when her second marriage took place in 1880.

Charlotte Bronte, though she had several offers, did not make choice of a husband — and even then only after lengthy deliberation—until she was 38.

George Sand never seems to have lost her fascination for men, and even as a white haired grandmother we find among her adoring friends and correspondents such geniuses as Flaubert and Tourgueneff.

THE STOWAWAY.

"BRING him up," said the skipper, tersely. They dragged him up the companion ladder accordingly—a shrinking, ragged lad, his pale face pinched with days of hunger, his sunken eyes scanning those around him as do the eyes of captive animals.

"H'm!" remarked the skipper. "So you're the stowaway! Nice looking young gentleman, too. Never did a stroke o' work in your life, I'll be bound. Never mind. We'll see if we can't make you. Eh, Mr. Billings?"

The first mate grinned. His grin was an eloquent one, and the boy shuddered as he saw it.

"How did you find him, Mr. Billings?" continued the skipper.

"Behind one of the cotton bales, sir," the mate replied. "He had an old mutton bone, with the meat all gnawed off. Provisions, I suppose, for the voyage."

"Provisions, eh? Well, it's precious few provisions he'll get aboard this ship unless he works for them. Pity we're out so far, or we might put him ashore."

For the first time the stowaway spoke.

"Please, don't put me ashore," he cried. "Anything but that. I must go to Cape Town, and I'm more than willing to work my way."

"Shut up!" snarled the mate, emphasizing his remark by a tug at the stowaway's ear. "Who gave you leave to talk, I'd like to know? Shut up, and hark to what the captain says."

"What's your name, and where d'ye come from?" demanded the captain, notebook in hand.

Tremblingly the boy replied that he was Dick Harley, late of the Tenterden grammar school; that his father, a widower, had left him behind in England, while he went to South Africa as assistant surveyor on the new Matabeleland Railway line; that nothing had been heard from that kindly father for a year or more, and lastly, that, compelled to leave school on account of unpaid bills, he had resolved to go to South Africa and find his missing parent.

"And so you thought to steal a passage on the Only Son of Portsmouth?" said the skipper.

"I was refused a berth by every other ship," pleaded the boy. "They said I looked too weak to work."

"Weak or not, you've got to work aboard the Only Son," said the first mate; "hasn't he, sir?"

The skipper nodded.

"That's correct, Mr. Billings," he answered. "If he doesn't want to pay for his passage, try him with the rope's end."

"Aye, aye, sir."

And again Billings grinned eloquently as he led the boy forward.

A quiet, elderly gentleman who had been watching these proceedings now stepped forward.

"Don't hurt him, Mr. Billings," he said. "He's only a child, you know."

"Captain's orders, sir," answered the mate, giving Dick Harley's ear an extra tweak.

The skipper laughed.

"Don't you waste any sympathy on that youngster," he exclaimed. "We can't afford to have any useless, white-handed stowaways aboard a vessel that carries £250,000 to the Chartered Company. How do you know, my dear Mr. Lancelot, that yonder boy is not the spy of some high-sea robbers, put on board to find out about the money?"

The man addressed as Lancelot looked grave.

"True," he said, "they did think in London that an attempt might be made to rob the ship. * * * But still, this mere boy——"

"I've seen 'mere boys' ere now, Mr. Lancelot, that were old men in crime. Take my advice and leave the stowaway to my first officer."

At this moment a shrill cry of pain, followed by another, and another, came from the lower deck.

"What's that?" cried Mr. Lancelot.

The captain of the Only Son of Portsmouth put his notebook, containing

"PLEASE DON'T PUT ME ASHORE."

Dick Harley's name and circumstances, carefully into his pocket.

"That, my dear sir," he answered, [illegible]illingly, "is the stowaway getting his [illegible] lesson in seamanship from Mr. [illegible]

[illegible]ncelot shrugged his shoulders. [illegible] he had been sent out in [illegible] £250,000 in gold, which was [illegible] the Bank of England to [illegible] and the Chartered Com[illegible] Africa. His duty lay in [illegible] where the treasure was stored, and not in preventing venturesome little stowaways from being rope's-ended.

II.

Bruised and stiff, Dick Harley lay curled up between a seaman's chest and the forecastle bulkhead. One of the deck hands had taken pity on him and thrown a piece of tarpaulin over his aching shoulders. Thus he lay completely hidden so that the men on the larboard watch, who had just turned in after four hours' wrestling with wind and water, knew nothing of his presence.

"What became of the stowaway," asked one of these worthies.

"Jumped overboard, I expect," answered another. "Billings gave him 'whatfor,' I can tell you. I must say I don't understand why he wanted to wallop the poor little wretch."

A chuckle ran around the forecastle.

"Why, you donkey," cried the man who had first spoken, "Billings just wanted to show how zealous he is in the company's service. The captain thinks there's nobody like Billings."

"PLEASE THROW UP YOUR HANDS."

Just then the mate appeared, and, remarking that the captain was quite right, proceeded to give his orders for a scheme which made the stowaway under his canvas prick up his ear—one of them was still very painful from the mate's cruelty—and listen intently, for the scheme, in which all of that watch were accomplices, having shipped with that express design, was nothing less than the capture of the £250,000 and the sending adrift of the captain and Mr. Lancelot, if it was not necessary to murder them to secure the treasure.

To stir from his hiding place at this moment would mean death at the hands of those desperate men. And as yet none of them showed any intention of obeying Billings' advice and "turning in."

They examined their revolvers—for every one of them seemed to be armed—and talked over the coming attack upon the Chartered Company's treasure. Dick had almost made up his mind to risk a crawl along the floor toward the companion ladder, and a rush thence upon deck when one of the desperadoes yawned. A yawn is more contagious than yellow fever. Within five minutes every man in the forecastle was showing evidences of weariness. First one and then another crawled to their bunks, and were presently heard to slumber noisily. The example spread until the last of the band knocked the ashes out of his pipe and retired to rest. Soon all of them were in the land of Nod.

Cautiously Dick Harley peeped out from under his tarpaulin. Then he ventured forth and set one foot on the companion ladder.

"Who's there?" growled a sailor drowsily.

Dick's answer was to slip as quickly and as noiselessly as his bruises would allow up the ladder. At the head he listened intently.

"Who was it, Bill?" asked a second voice.

"It was that blamed cat, I'm thinkin'," replied the first speaker, and to Dick's relief there was no pursuit. Quickly he ran along the deck and mounted the bridge to where the skipper stood.

That night as the first mate of the Only Son came up from his cabin with a revolver in his hip pocket and a grin on his face, he was met at the head of the stairs by the captain and Mr. Lancelot. To his surprise both of these gentlemen were armed, while behind them he observed the despised stowaway, Dick Harley, with a naked cutlass in his hand.

"Mr. Billings," said the captain, "you will please throw up your hands. Your little plot has been discovered. Ah, thank you——" (as he drew the pistol out of Billings' pocket), "you may return now to your cabin and consider yourself a prisoner."

"Wh—what is the meaning of this, sir?" sputtered the mate.

"The meaning, Mr. Billings," put in Lancelot, "is that this boy here heard your whole delightful scheme to cob the Chartered Company of £250,000. He very promptly informed the captain. Your accomplices in the forecastle were captured in their bunks, and most of them have confessed everything."

Billings looked at the speaker, then at Dick Harley.

"The st[illegible] miserabl[illegible]

"Yes, Mr. Billings—the stowaway has saved the Chartered Company of South Africa £250,000 and a staunch, seaworthy ship. You will find that the company knows how to be grateful."

And grateful, indeed, the company proved itself to be. A month later (while Billings and his gang were awaiting trial for attempted piracy in the Cape Town jail) Dick Harley was shaking his father's wasted hand in the new hospital at Salisbury. The surveyor's recovery from a lingering fever was greatly accelerated, you may be sure, by the news that the Chartered Company had rewarded by a position of trust and honor the timely action of the quondam stowaway on the Only Son.—Utica Globe.

SPANISH BARBARISM

For Hundreds of Years She Has Been a Blot on the Face of the Earth.

The treatment which Spain has accorded her colonies has always been brutal. Spanish hearts and Spanish methods changed but little from Cortez to Weyler, the only difference, instead of increase and success as at the beginning, failure and decrease of empire is at the end.

Spain has always felt her inferiority in this respect to other nations, and in order to apparently maintain her position she has bid defiance to every other nation on the face of the earth.

Spain has for a hundred years repeatedly thrown down the gauntlet of defiance at our feet.

She has disregarded all treaty obligations. Who can recall the massacre of the crew of the Virginius without a thrill of horror passing through his frame? The Spanish depredations on our commerce up to 1814 were so extensive that she was obliged to cede Florida to the United States on their agreeing to settle with our citizens, accepting Florida in payment of the lump sum.

The United States has not alone suffered from Spain's depredations. As long ago as 1739 the episode which is known as the war of Jenkins' ear arose from the barbarous treatment of Capt. Jenkins, an English officer, and the crew of the English ship Rebecca, which was captured by a Spanish cruiser and searched. The Spaniards, after hanging Captain Jenkins at the yard-arm, with a cabin boy tied to his feet, unstrung him just in time to prevent death, and cutting off his ear presented it to him and bade him take it to his king. Captain Jenkins did as he was bid. The wave of indignation raised by this act of cruelty caused Horace Walpole, who was prime minister, to declare war against Spain. Spain bitterly regretted the act of her naval commander.

In 1762 Spain, by her repeated oppressions, forced England to again declare war against her. Lord Albemarle, with a fleet of 200 vessels and about 15,000 men, appeared before Havana, and although defended by almost twice that number of Spaniards fell in less than two months time, and with it Cuba into English hands. It remained there until by the treaty of Paris, in 1763, it was restored in exchange for possessions which England at that time considered more valuable.

Spain was the last of the great powers to recognize the sovereignty of the United States.

At the end of the nineteenth century nothing remains of her vast posessions but the Philippine Islands in the Pacific Ocean and Cuba and Porto Rico in the Western seas. Mexico threw off the yoke in 1811. Then Central and South America in 1816, and the Argentine Republic was formed from the province of La Plata; then Chili, Peru, the United States of Colombia, Ecuador and Venezuela broke the chains of monarchy. San Domingo and Hayti followed.

FISH AS FOOD.

Easy of Digestion and a Light and Wholesome Article of Diet.

It has been frequently stated that fish diet, by virtue of the phosphorous which it contains, is pre-eminently adapted to nourish the brain, and that those who subsist on it largely are distinguished for their brightness and intellectuality, says the New York Ledger. It is perfectly true that a small percentage of phosphorus enters into the composition of the healthy brain, and while it is also true that fish contains more or less phosphorus that may and probably does pass into the circulation, it is yet to be proved either by theory or by experience that a diet of fish is on the whole better adapted to supply the waste of the brain than a liberal variety of other alimentary substances, and especially of meats.

Fish is easy of digestion and creates little vascular excitement and consequently forms a light and wholesome article of diet. Saltwater fish are the best of any, as their flesh is more solid, more agreeable and healthy, less exposed to putrescence and less viscid. They possess these excellent qualities when fresh. When salted, they have all the properties of salt fish and consequently its disadvantages.

Those fish which have scales are in general the most easily digested and the best, and of all these fish the fresh herring appears to deserve the preference. The herring, codfish, turbot and flounder are perhaps the most digestible and best of fish. Salmon and mackerel, lobster and most other kinds of shellfish are more difficult of digestion. The mode of cooking fish is of considerable importance. Frying them in oil or lard is an objectionable process. In general the process of boiling is best adapted to render them wholesome. Stewed fish should be avoided by the dyspeptic. Acid sauces and pickles render fish more wholesome for the stomach, while butter has a tendency to prevent digestion, while spice and salt used in moderate quantities facilitate the digestive process. One of the best sauces that can be used with fish is lemon juice.

What Did He Mean?

An amusing anecdote at the expense of an excellent and necessary profession comes from Temple Bar.

A young doctor, a novice in his profession, who was also somewhat of a novice with the gun, was out after hare, and after he had missed several shots the old keeper said:

"Let me have a try. I'll doctor 'em."

It is exceedingly hard to get along with a balky horse.

"REMEMBER THE MAINE!"

Signal Under Which American Ships Went Into Action at Manila.

A naval message that is destined to go ringing through the ages with that of Nelson's "England expects that every man this day will do his duty," is "Remember the Maine." It was this admonition that floated in flags from the masthead of the Olympia in Manila Bay on that fateful morning of May 2, 1898.

To the landsman the string of bunting conveys but little meaning. To the naval man the small signal flags as shown in the picture read from top to bottom, as all naval signals are read, represent the following combination of letters: R, N, Q; Q, K, H; B, G, J. With the aid of the code book the combination of letters spells out the nation's slogan: "Remember the Maine."

There is always a battle cry of some sort displayed at the mast of the flagship of the commander of the fleet when a squadron goes into action. It has been the custom ever since the adoption of marine flag signals for suddenly communicating intelligence to distant objects at sea. And signals have been employed for many years, their origin being indeed lost in remote antiquity.

During the day flags are used for signals. The first code used in the United States navy was almost precisely similar to the code in use about the same time by the British. There were twenty-six flags, one for each letter, and a number of pennants for special and defining systems. There was no fixed code dictionary, and beyond a few general signals each commander made up his own combinations. About 1816 a code dictionary was issued.

A new code was adopted in 1846, known the Rogers code. In this nine square flags and five pennants were used, with a dictionary with 13,405 combinations. Rogers' code was modified in 1861 to a system having twelve square flags and nine pennants, there being ten numbered flags, three repeating pennants and two square and six pennants as defining signals. The dictionary was reduced to contain 9,999 signals. In 1866 this system was still further elaborated by the addition of eight defining flags and pennants. At the same time the signal book was remodeled. Tactical signals were separated from the general signal book, and the latter divided into alphabetical, compass, word, geographical and general classifications.

Aside from the flag signals there are two other codes, one for use during fogs and the other at night. During a fog the signals are made by means of the steam whistles, the code consisting of long and short blasts, arranged somewhat after the fashion of the dots and dashes in the Morse telegraphic alphabet.

of Philadelphia, to succeed to this important position. Charles Emory Smith was born in Mansfield, Conn., fifty-six years ago. When a child his family removed to Albany, where he graduated from the Albany Academy and later from the Schenectady University. In 1861 he was active in organizing volunteers for the civil war under Gen. Rathbone. He became editor of the Albany Express in 1869 and five years later acted as president of the New York State Press Association. He served as delegate to the Republican State convention for six successive years, being temporary and permanent chairman in 1879. He was a delegate to the National Republican convention in Cincinnati in 1876 and drafted a large portion of the platform. He removed to Philadelphia in 1879 and took charge of the Philadelphia Press. He has since been editor of the Press. Mr. Smith was appointed minister to Russia in 1890 by President Harrison. He is well known as an orator as well as a writer and has a large acquaintanceship among the public men of the country.

"Remember," said the excited man, "money talks. I'll bet seventy-five cents that I'm right. Money talks." And the man with a shaggy silk hat and a chronic expression of disgust edged away from the crowd with the remark: "Yes, and it's just like some people. "I can't afford to have people think I don't know about this particular question," said the politician, "and I haven't the time I need to read up on it." NEW YORK LANDLORDS.

Let Their Houses Remain Vacant While Demanding High Rentals.

A newcomer who has been looking for a home nest large enough to accommodate out of town furniture remarked today: "What's the matter with rents in this town anyway? I see thousands of flats and offices tenantless, but as most of them are beyond my means I'm curious to know why the landlords don't come down a peg or two and give a poor fellow a chance to locate within reasonable reach of his business." And so are others. A friend of mine up in Harlem is one of three occupants of a flat house built for ten. The seven apartments have been empty a year, but the agent refuses to lower the rent when any one of the three threatens to change his address, nor will he scale down the monthly figure in order to fill the vacant and profitless rooms. And this isn't a solitary case of this sort, by any means. Another real estate agent has been holding a row of fine flats for nearly three years because nobody feels like squandering $1,000 on any one of them. If he had knocked off $300, he could have rented every one of them. Just why the metropolitan landlord prefers loss to gain is one of the secrets of the real estate business that outsiders can only juggle with mentally.

Another peculiar feature of the business is the way in which the tenants who can put up a good bluff manage to enjoy all the comforts of an up to date home without paying scarcely anything for the privilege. I know one man here who doesn't pay over $200 a year for a $600 flat. He got behind in his rent, and then he jollied the janitor, who did the collecting. The janitor, in turn, smoothed down the landlord, and as a result the tenant got in deeper and deeper. Now he pays a month's rent once in a while and puts up such a bold front that he gets a receipt on his promises. In the same house is another tenant who pays $65 a month, but he shuts up his apartments for two months every summer and goes seaward. He flatly refuses to pay rent while doing the grand, and the landlord hasn't as yet done a thing to him. Still another high flier puts up $75 a month for the pick of the premises. He's in about four months now, but as yet care hasn't carved any wrinkles on his broad brow. All of which leads to the conclusion that rents are high here in order to cover losses of the sort cited.—New York Letter in Pittsburg Dispatch.

SARCASM BY WHISTLER.

Word Sketch Which Scored a Member of the Hogarth Club.

There is in London an institution called the Hogarth club, the membership of which is restricted to artists and litterateurs. It is something on the lines of the old Bohemian club, and both business men and American millionaires are strictly interdicted. Whistler is a member, and, of course, shines by his witticisms. The lines being strictly drawn there is always an effort being made by some outsider to force an entrance, and in the case of Baron Grant it met with success. Grant was a treble millionaire who had made his fortune in Turkish contracts and had invested in an Italian title on his way back to London. He was a particularly notorious person and quite the last man whom the Hogarths should have admitted. However, by dint of buying pictures he got in and proceeded to make his friends happy.

One night a big dinner was organized in his honor and Whistler invited. Though the great artist had refused, he happened into the club on the important evening and a deputation of his friends finally persuaded him into the supper room. He appeared, was wildly cheered and was at once asked to make a speech.

"Gentlemen," he said, "it is on the subject of titles I should like to speak. There are several kinds of titles. Some men are born into them—these are inherited titles; others are conferred by the sovereign and have been earned by distinguished service; a few are attributes of the government, of the law or of the church. All this you know, most of you. But a title which is not inherited, nor yet bestowed for merit, nor even the sign of a position, is but a barren grant."—San Francisco Wave.

OUR AMERICAN POLICY.

The policy of this country regarding foreign complications seems likely to remain conservative. The Monroe doctrine, according to the declaration of our leading politicians, will be sustained, but patience and prudence in official quarters will restrain the exuberance of public opinion. The wisest and most prudent course for the rheumatic and the malarious is to use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which also cures kidney complaint and dyspepsia.

Her Success With Violets.

Mrs. Leavitt's violet farm in Connecticut is one of the institutions of the country, and it is a business started only within the last few years. Her violets are always sold for 3 or 4 cents apiece, and there is a steady demand for them the whole year through. Other women have tried violet raising and almost without exception have met with success.

THE TURN OF LIFE.

Owing to modern methods of living, not one woman in a thousand approaches this perfectly natural change without experiencing a train of very annoying and sometimes painful symptoms.

Those dreadful hot flashes, sending the blood surging to the heart until it seems ready to burst, and the faint feeling that follows, sometimes with chills, as if the heart were going to stop for good, are symptoms of a dangerous nervous trouble. The nerves are crying out for assistance. The cry should be heeded in time. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was prepared to meet the needs of woman's system at this trying period of her life.

MRS. DELLA WATSON, 524 West 5th St., Cincinnati, Ohio, says:

"I have been using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for some time during the change of life and it has been a saviour of life unto me. I can cheerfully recommend it to all women, and I know it will give permanent relief. I would be glad to relate my experience to any sufferer."

SCHLEY'S FLYING SQUADRON.

THE BRAVE COMMODORE, HIS VALIANT MEN AND HIS POWERFUL SHIPS.

Commodore Winfield Scott Schley, commanding the United States flying squadron, was born in 1840 on his father's farm, a tract of land comprising 300 acres, situated along the Emmitsburg turnpike road, three miles north of Frederick City, Md. His father was John T. Schley, a brother of Colonel Edward Schley, whose descendants are today among the most prominent and best known people of Frederick. There were seven in the family of which John T. Schley was a member, all of whom inherited large farms, and several of them fought with distinction in the Mexican war. Thomas Schley, the Maryland founder of the family, was an Alsatian by descent and began life in the town of Frederick away back in the last century.

Commodore Schley's father married a Miss Virginia McClure, a beautiful woman of Baltimore. She died a few years subsequently, and her husband died some years ago in Baltimore. When the commodore was not more than a few days old, the Mexican war hero, General Winfield Scott, was a guest of his father at Richfield (the name of the farm). The friendship between the men was so great that soon afterward the youngster was named Winfield Scott Schley in honor of the old warrior.

As a boy he was full of fun, mischievous and venturesome. He was fond of climbing trees, robbing birds' nests and seemed never to tire of playing tricks on his "woolly headed" old uncles, all of whom, nevertheless, thought the world of the prankish lad. His early years were spent on his father's farm, where he lived until about 16 years of age, when he was admitted to the Naval academy at Annapolis. Before entering the academy he spent much time in company with his first cousins, the children of the late Colonel Edward Schley, on the latter's large farm not far from his own home. The boys and girls of each family played together in company with the children of the colored slaves and none was more lively and mischievous than Scott.

Near the Foot of His Class.

In those good old times the Schleys owned farms of several hundred acres or more and the principal event of the season was harvest time. It was no unusual thing for Colonel Edward Schley to lay in an extra supply of catables the week before harvest, for well he knew that those who gathered his golden grain would need it all before the "wind blew over the stubbles." Harvest time in those days brought out a force of willing helpers—willing because the boys used to make 50 cents a day while the slaves, men and women, of course, were made to work without compensation. In 1852 among those who gathered sheaves in Colonel Schley's harvest field at the rate of 50 cents a day was Winfield Scott Schley. He worked eight days, made $4 and the receipt for his payment is now in the possession of Mrs. Laura Schley Chapline, his first cousin, who with her family resides in Frederick.

Commodore Schley did not distinguish himself at the Naval academy, where he graduated in 1860, near the foot of his class. This was not owing to dullness or lack of natural ability, but because he was so busy with important mischief that he couldn't get much time for study. [illegible] very serious, however, except one. That was when he challenged a fellow officer to fight. To issue such a challenge was a serious offense, but the matter was overlooked because, as President Lincoln remarked a little later on a similar occasion, the American people are always ready to find an apology for a man who is guilty of being too ready to fight.

He was a bold and spirited petty officer in the war, serving on the blockade ships, but of course too young for important command. Nevertheless he became known as a plucky youngster, ready for anything.

His Career in the Civil War.

Probably no naval officer in the world has had such varied experience of so many kinds, in war and peace, as Schley.

In brief it is this: In 1861-5 active service in the civil war; 1865 suppressed a riot of 400 Chinamen on one of the Chincha islands and also landed in La Union, San Salvador, because of an insurrection and took possession of the custom house to protect American interests; 1871 landed marines in Korea and thrashed the natives; 1876 punished pirates in the lower Kongo; 1884 rescued Greely, the arctic explorer; 1890 took Ericsson's body to Sweden; 1891 commanded marines; 1892 he went on lighthouse service, with headquarters at Staten Island; 1893 made plans for buoying New York harbor; 1895 succeeded Robley D. Evans ("Fighting Bob") as commander of the cruiser New York. Between times he visited Japan and other faroff places, did scientific work, rescued shipwrecked sailors and did general utility work.

Twice before Commodore Schley has been a leading figure in the newspapers. In 1884 he was the first officer to volunteer to rescue General (then Lieutenant) Greely away up in the arctic regions. It is said that on the Greely expedition some of Schley's officers were disposed to protest that he was taking serious risks with his ships. His reply was: "Gentlemen, there are times when it is necessary to take risks. This is one of those times."

CAPTAIN FRANCIS A. COOK.

The Rescue of Greely.

He commanded the expedition of the Thetis, Bear and Alert and brought the survivors in triumph to St. John's, N. F. It was a good, clean, quick job, well done, and his arrival was just in the nick of time. It was dramatic. It led to promotion and the command of the Baltimore, then a new ship. In 1891 Schley came back in a hurry from his Ericsson trip to Sweden and hurried to Valparaiso in the Baltimore. It was a fine, new, nice white ship, and he did want to try her. There is not much doubt of that. In Chile there was a civil war. Minister Egan was accused of favoring one side. Feeling against the Americans ran high. It culminated when two sailors of the Baltimore were murdered in the streets of Valparaiso, the police looking on and probably assisting. Schley landed marines at midnight. He has been criticised for this. But at least he was not afraid to fight. Because of this willingness he got no chance to do so.

There was a day when a rumor reached New York that the Baltimore had been blown up—as the Maine was. What really happened was this: War between Chile and the United States was imminent. There was talk away down there of a combined attack on the Baltimore to be made by the Chilean cruisers Esmeralda and Almirante Cochran and by torpedo boats. On either side of the Baltimore lay the German ship Leipzig and the British Melpomene. Captain Schley requested their commanders to change their anchorages and give his guns a fair show. They did as requested, the Englishman rather unwillingly. There was no fight.

Maybe Schley did wear the chip on his shoulder a little too prominently.

CAPTAIN JOHN W. PHILIP.

His transfer to the lighthouse service was construed as a rebuke. It was not until 1895 that he again received command of a ship. Schley wears a fine gold watch. It was voted to him by the Maryland legislature after his rescue of Greely. More than this he values a handsome ebony cane with a gold head, given him by the crew of the Baltimore when he was relieved of the command. The spokesman chosen by the seamen on this occasion touched his cap and, with a scrape of his foot, said, "You know, sir, that when you were an officer the regulations would not allow us to give you a present, but now that you have given up the command of the ship you are only a gentleman."

A Born Fighter.

He is a born fighter. Wherever since the war broke out there has been a promise of trouble Schley has been pretty apt to be on the spot. He is resolute, resourceful and daring, quick to decide in an emergency and confident in himself. It would always be his instinct in battle to take the offensive, to strike the first blow. It is said that when he was appointed to the command of the flying squadron he went to the president and begged permission to go to meet the Spanish flotilla of torpedo boats and torpedo boat destroyers which had started across the ocean.

He urged that the approaching armada could not be regarded otherwise than as a serious menace. Spain in sending it was to all intents and purposes committing an act of war. At the very least it ought to be stopped and made to go back. If it would not comply with this command, then it should be attacked.

In 1863 Commodore Schley married Miss Nannie Franklin of Annapolis, an attractive young woman of good old Maryland stock. She is a very jolly and popular woman, and as ready to dance or make merry as she was a quarter of a century ago. They have three children, Thomas Franklin, Virginia and Winfield Scott. The only daughter, Virginia, married, in 1890, Ralph Granville Montague Stewart Wortley, a nephew of the Earl of Wharncliffe. If he cared to stay in England, Wortley would be no end of a swell. Like young Paget, W. C. Whitney's son-in-law, he prefers to stay in this country. He is a hustling American railroad man and financier, with headquarters in New York, and doesn't use all his names.

Schley as a Joker.

Several anecdotes are told of Commodore Schley during his younger years which convey a good idea of his sportive, jovial character and his keen enjoyment of a joke. He was on the Niagara in 1860, when it conveyed the members of the Japanese embassy to their home. The vessel, on her way around Good Hope, stopped on the coast of Africa, where the Japanese laid in a stock of monkeys. Old Captain McKean and the officers did not object, for it was public policy then to gratify every wish of the Japanese. It was only Midshipman Schley and his deck scrubbers who objected. The monkeys were allowed to roam about the ship as they pleased. There were all kinds of monkeys, big and little. Several huge ringtails would almost live in the rigging, making flying leaps from footrope to backstay, always catching firmly by their tails. The monkeys were not pleasant creatures about the decks and were a subject of especial aversion to Midshipman Schley.

One morning Schley had the early watch, and with a gang of men was scrubbing down. The monkeys were full of mischief and were making the rigging ring with their chattering mockery.

"Bring me a bucket of slush," said Schley to a captain of a top, and to another he gave orders that two of the big monkeys should be caught.

It was in the China sea, and the big ship was making 15 knots. Schley took the two captive monkeys and carefully greased their tails, then with a savage whoop at them struck both with a rope's end. Both monkeys broke for the fore weather rigging and made a wild leap for the lower studding sail sheet, which was over the water and 30 feet from the ship's side. Swish went the tails around the quivering sheet. Alas, the tails slipped, and two sons of Africa went shrieking into the sea. The Japs ran screaming from their cabins, but the officer of the watch told them the ship could not be put about or her sail shortened in time to save the monkeys; so there was mourning in the Japanese cabin.

Captain Versus Lieutenant.

Another story is told of him which tends to show the complexity and many sidedness of his character, his youthful ambition, his love of fun and his alertness in taking advantage of circumstances and adopting expedients to suit the occasion.

After Commodore Schley left the Niagara he was promptly promoted to a lieutenancy and assigned as executive officer of one of the 90 day gunboats, the Owasco of the gulf squadron. Her commanding officer was a devotee of John Barleycorn, and periodically had to retire to his cabin for repairs, where he usually staid a week. The Owasco was stationed off Mobile and was one of a small squadron of which Captain James Alden of the Richmond was senior officer.

One day a quartermaster of the Richmond reported to Captain Alden that the captain's gig of the Owasco was approaching, the captain's pennant flying. Supposing his visitor to be the captain of the Owasco, Alden put on his uniform coat, the side boys were ordered and the boatswain's mate made ready for his three pipes at the gangway. When the Owasco's gig came alongside, the man who sprang up the ladder was Lieutenant Schley.

"I expected to see Captain —— of the Owasco," said Alden, with slight sarcasm.

"I am commander of the Owasco, sir," said Schley.

"Since when?" asked Alden.

"An hour ago, sir," said Schley.

"Where is Captain ——?"

"Locked up in his cabin, sir, drunk."

"Who locked him in?" asked Alden.

"I did. I first put him under arrest and then shut him up in his cabin. Then I took command of the ship, and here I am to report for orders."

Alden was fond of a joke, and he was at first disposed to laugh at the young man's summary action, but he said:

"Well, the first order I'll give you is for you to lower that pennant in the gig, go back to your ship, sir, unlock that cabin door and restore Captain —— to duty. Then report to me in writing if the captain's illness still incapacitates him and I will know what to do. Don't be in too great a hurry to get command of a ship, Mr. Schley!"

SCHLEY'S BRAVE CAPTAINS.

The Gallant Officers and the Formidable Ships They Command.

Though the fleet commanded by Commodore Schley is numerically much weaker than that of Admiral Sampson, it contains nevertheless some of the finest and most formidable vessels in the navy. It comprises two battleships, the Texas and the Massachusetts, and four armored cruisers, the Brooklyn, the Columbia, the Minneapolis and the New Orleans.

The battleship Texas, Captain John W. Philip, is one of the best vessels of her class. She can steam 17 knots an hour, has a displacement of 6,315 tons, develops 9,000 horsepower and cost $2,-

CAPTAIN JAMES H. SANDS.

500,000. Her main battery is composed of two 12 inch and six 6 inch guns, and her second battery consists of a dozen smaller guns.

The Texas has been rather unfortunate in her history, so much so indeed that the sailors, inclined to be superstitious as they are, believe that she is hoodooed. They entertained the same belief about the Maine, which had met with a series of accidents before the final catastrophe in Havana harbor. About two months ago the Texas was placed in the drydock in Brooklyn for repairs in consequence of slight injuries she sustained by running ashore. While in the drydock one of the caissons gave way with the result that the sides of the Texas were torn and her superstructure partially damaged. The full extent of the injury it is impossible to ascertain, but after undergoing repairs she is said by the naval authorities to be as sound as ever.

Captain Philip was born in New York Aug. 26, 1840, and was appointed to the Naval academy from that state in 1856. He graduated in 1860, was attached to the sloop Marion in 1861 and was commissioned as lieutenant in 1862. He was on special service 1862-3, was on the steam gunboat Chippewa, south Atlantic blockading squadron, 1863-5 and participated in the siege of Charleston. He was attached to the team sloop Wachusett, East India quadron, 1866-8, the steam sloop Hartford, flagship Asiatic squadron, 1866-7 and attached to the steam sloop Richmond, European fleet, 1869-72. He was commissioned as commander in 1874,

CAPTAIN F. T. HIGGINSON.

commanded the Adams (second rate) in 1877 and the armored cruiser New York in 1893.

The Powerful Massachusetts.

The battleship Massachusetts, Captain F. T. Higginson, is one of the largest and most efficient of her class. She cost $3,020,000, has a displacement of 10,228 tons, her horsepower amounts to 9,000 and develops a speed of 15 knots an hour. Her armament consists of four 13 inch guns, eight 8 inch, four 6 inch and 30 guns of smaller caliber.

Captain Higginson was born in Massachusetts and appointed to the Naval academy from that state in 1857 and graduated in 1861. He saw considerable service during the civil war and was at the bombardment of Forts Jackson and St. Philip, Chalmette batteries and the capture of New Orleans. He was commissioned as a lieutenant in 1862, as lieutenant commander in 1866 and was commissioned as commander in 1876.

SCHLEY'S BIRTHPLACE, NEAR FREDERICK, MD.

In 1893 Captain Higginson, while in command of the cruiser Atlanta, was relieved of his command and ordered home because of his failure to exercise proper dispatch in getting his ship to sea for Nicaragua to protect American interests there.

The protected armored cruiser Brooklyn, Captain Francis A. Cook, is the most magnificent cruiser in the navy. She marked almost as great an advance on the New York as the New York did on the armored cruisers of foreign navies that had preceded her. She is larger, more powerfully armed, carries a larger coal supply and has more capacious accommodations for her crew. The contract for the Brooklyn was awarded to the famous shipbuilding firm of William Cramp & Sons of Philadelphia. Her keel was laid in August, 1893, and was completed three years afterward. She has a speed of 20 knots an hour, her displacement is 9,271 tons, and she cost $3,000,000. She carries eight 8 inch guns, twelve 5 inch and 20 smaller guns.

Career of Captain Cook.

Captain Cook was born in Northampton, Mass., May 10, 1843. He was graduated from the high school of his native town, and was preparing for college at Dudley institute when, on Sept. 20, 1860, he received an appointment to the Naval academy. During the excitement incident to the opening of the civil war the secretary of the navy ordered the removal of the academy to Newport. The term was shortened one year on account of the graduating class being unable to take the customary summer's cruise, and Cook left with the class of '63.

He was promoted to ensign in 1863, master in 1866 and commissioned as lieutenant commander in 1868.

In 1886 he was ordered to the command of the sloop Ranger, on special service on the lower coast of California. In 1889 he was detached from the Ranger and ordered as inspector of ordnance at the Boston navy yard. For four years he was stationed at that point, and in 1893 he was ordered to the navy department as assistant to the chief of the bureau of navigation, where he remained until appointed to take command of the Brooklyn.

Captain Jewell and the Minneapolis.

The protected cruiser Minneapolis, Captain Theodore F. Jewell, has a displacement of 7,335 tons, a speed of 23.7 knots an hour and has 20,862 horsepower. She cost $2,690,000. Her armament consists of one 8 inch gun, two 6 inch, eight 4 inch and 16 other guns of smaller caliber.

Captain Jewell was born in the District of Columbia and was appointed to the Naval academy from Virginia in 1861. He graduated in 1864. He served on the Colorado of the European squadron from 1865 to 1867. He was promoted to master in 1866 and served on the Canandaigua, also of the European squadron, during 1867 and 1868. He was commissioned lieutenant in 1869 and was on duty in the hydrographic office. He was commissioned lieutenant commander in 1868 and served on the Sabine.

He was attached to the Naval academy as assistant in the department of physics and chemistry in 1871 and was ordered to the Tuscarora the next year serving as executive officer during her deep sea sounding expedition in the north Pacific ocean. He was instructor in physics and chemistry at the Naval academy from 1874 to 1878.

Captain Jewell was in command of the coast survey steamer Gedney from June, 1878, to August, 1879, when he became executive officer of the Constitution. He was placed in command of the naval torpedo station at Newport in May, 1881, and remained there until 1886, being promoted to commander on Jan. 26, 1885.

The Essex was under his command on the Asiatic station from June, 1886, until May, 1889. He was again placed in command of the naval torpedo station in December, 1889.

The protected cruiser Columbia, Captain James H. Sands, has a displacement of 7,375 tons, her speed is 22.8 knots, her horsepower 18,509, and she cost $2,725,000. For armament the Columbia has two 6 inch guns, eight 4 inch, one 8 inch gun and 16 smaller guns.

Captain Sands was born in the District of Columbia and appointed from Maryland to the Naval academy in 1859. He graduated in 1863, was promoted ensign the same year, was commissioned as lieutenant in 1866 and as lieutenant commander in 1868. He was on the New York 1875-6, and the latter year was placed on duty at the navy yard, New York.

The New Orleans, Formerly the Amazonas.

The most interesting vessel in Commodore Schley's fleet, or, in fact, in the United States navy, is the new cruiser New Orleans. She is nothing less than a British man-of-war flying the American flag, for only a few weeks ago she was at Gravesend, having just been turned out, a splendid new cruiser, by the great English shipmaking works of Sir William Armstrong. And, by way of an early variety in her career, she was at that time flying the green and yellow flag of Brazil. Even so late as a few days ago, when she left the navy yard at Brooklyn, there was still upon her stern in the midst of a mass of gold arabesque work the Portuguese name of Amazonas.

She is very swift, capable of making 21 knots an hour.

The largest guns of the New Orleans are 25 feet long, which is nearly five feet longer than similar guns of American make, and they add largely to the peculiarity of her appearance. There are six of these, and the caliber of their bores is six inches. One of them surmounts the forecastle—a "bow chaser;"

CAPTAIN THEODORE F. JEWELL.

another one displays its humped back and long proboscis on the poop deck, while two more crouch on either side. It is very noticeable how exposed are all the guns of this ship, the sides of the ship being much cut away to allow a full swing for the long barrels. Between the 6 inch guns on either side are two more guns, 4.7 inch caliber, and between these last two and directly amidships there is still another gun, a 6 pounder.

There are also, fore and [illegible] other 6 pounders. These [illegible] known as rapid firing N[illegible] She carries 400 men [illegible] space being made p[illegible] which is 330 f[illegible] only 42 feet.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY JULY 15.....1898

FROM SWAMPER

[The following communication from "Swamper" was received too late for publication last week.]

BIG PINE, July 1, 1898.

The hamlet has had a few simple incidents still unrecorded. Last week on Thursday the U. S. Indian school closed a very successful term. Quite a number of our pale faced citizens attended the closing exercises, and all concurred in the verdict that Mrs. Peters had advanced the brown girls and boys in the prescribed course to an unexpected degree. The proficiency in music art and literature showing well up to the standard of the Big Pine District school.

The first cutting of the alfalfa is fairly on and will soon be safely stacked.

The Glorious Fourth was duly honored by the good and patriotic people of this section. Most of our folks visited Bishop and expressed themselves as pleased at the effort of the Athenians in directing the expression of the sentiments pertinent to the occasion. Many expressions of praise and appreciation of the speech of Hon. P. W. Forbes in his response to the sentiment "Our Country and Flag" Alex. McNett of the hamlet came home smothered with laurels as the featherweight of the Benedictine team in the victorious pull against the blessingless single men of the tug-of-war. The remnant of our population concluded, late on the eve of Independence Day, to honor the occasion by reading the indictment of George III. A meeting was called for 8 o'clock at the hall. Mr. Wm. H. Uhlmeyer was chosen chairman and Mr. John Conner of Fish Springs as reader. The reader was nicely introduced by the chairman and rendered that immortal document in a masterly manner. The cheers were given for Old Glory, Sampson and General Shafter. The hall was cleared, and by nine o'clock a lively dance was in evidence, and continued until the flush of morn warned the haymakers of the near approach of the hour of toil. At midnight the happy hoppers were regaled at the Williams House with a repast right up to the standard of that inn. Much enthusiasm was evinced at the cheering messages of victories for our flag.

There is much talk here of late on the subject of fusion in Inyo County of the silver forces. I would like to have some advocate of this measure penetrate the thickness of my stupidity by announcing a cogent reason and a reasonable motive for the proposed departure. That is to say, in what political trail must the Bryan Democrats try to fill an organization more potent for the cause of silver than the one he leaves to enter this trail—when he quits the old camp? How can the sentiments of the county candidate on this subject help or hinder the restoration of silver? Would or would not it be as well to abandon the proposition to organize local party on a national issue? If some kind-hearted patriot will unseal my twistedness on this subject he will confer a favor on a candid seeker for the light. I desire to further tax the kindness of the aforesaid advocate for his opinion as to whether or not either of the central committees can properly exercise the authority to declare for fusion without submitting the proposition to the electors of the parties.

The transformation of the gin palace opposite the Williams house is nearly completed, and Louis Joseph will soon occupy it in the capacity of a merchant.

Rumors are rife that a suburban temple of Baccius will be erected just south of piety flat, the presiding genius of which will be a loyal American from the citron groves of the southern edge of Europe.

The foundations of the addition to our knowledge shop is well under way, and the constructors of the building will commence work next week.

Miss Mercy Spear of Lone Pine and Miss Jesse Jewett of Ventura are visiting at Alvord.

Ye genial pace of ye candidate beginneth to lighten up the village streets.

A HARD MAN TO BEAT

THE LIVE RAILROAD AGENT IS UP TO ALL SORTS OF TRICKS.

Circus People Are Pretty Cute Themselves, but This Story Shows How One Party Was Cleverly Outwitted by the Hustling Railroader.

"There are people who think you can't beat a circus man, but I want to tell you that the hardest man to do is a live railroad man."

The old sawdust manager had tried it. He continued:

"Know where Purcell is in the Indian Territory? Away down at the jumping off place on the Santa Fe road. The show had been at Purcell and we wanted to get out in the night for a long run. We were going to make a jump to Kansas City. Not far from Purcell is another town, Oklahoma City. At that point a competing road with the Santa Fe runs in. We had 500 people, and of course the railroad men were after us. It was a big haul. Some of our people bought through tickets from Purcell, and they didn't worry. But about 200, maybe more, of the crowd that always haggles over a 10 cent dicker concluded to take the Santa Fe from Purcell to Oklahoma City, pay the short haul, and then take the competing line at Oklahoma, the agents of which were active and full of promises.

"Then the Santa Fe man fixed it so the dickerers couldn't buy any tickets from Purcell to Oklahoma, for the train we were to go on was a special. The dickerers said that was all right; that they would wait for the regular. In less than five minutes a bulletin was slapped on the board of the station to the effect that the regular Santa Fe was 12 hours late. That made the fellows who were dickering for a cheaper rate turn white around their gills.

"In another five minutes I saw a man on a track velocipede scudding down the stretch. Every man to his business. So I thought the railroad people know what they were doing, and they did. That chap on the velocipede was going down the track to flag the regular and hold it indefinitely. Smart trick, wasn't it? Wait till I tell you. There was a smarter trick than that.

"When the special got ready to pull out, the dickerers asked the agent if they could pay on the train from Purcell to Oklahoma, and he said 'Cert.' So they all boarded the train at Purcell, intending to get off at Oklahoma. Just before the train pulled out the agent walks down to the engine and asks the old man at the throttle how long he had been on the road and about the capacity of his iron horse, and so forth.

"'How many miles an hour can she go at her best?' asked the agent.

"'On a good track, 65 miles.'

"'Is it a good track through Oklahoma City?'

"'Yes, pretty good.'

"'All right. You've got no orders to stop there nor to slow up, have you?'

"'Not yet.'

"'Well, when you get to the edge of the town you let her go. Don't stop for anything—flags or teams or cattle. Scoot through the town at a 65 mile gait, or more if you like, and don't slow up until you strike that strip of desolation about 11 miles t'other side and you smoke a box of the finest cigars in Chicago. Is it a go?'

"'If I don't get no orders 'fore I start.'

"'Well, you are five minutes late now.'

"In a minute, and I calculate it was less, the circus special was under way. It went around curves like a scared snake. It shot across straight lines like a gazelle that had been singed. It whirled the dust of that country into the sky. After awhile we saw a town. Then we went through it like the woman that's shot from the catapult, only more so. One of the dickerers, who was smiling to think the conductor had not yet come round, asked a brakeman as the train was going through the street, 'What town is this?' The brakeman said, 'Oklahoma City.'

"The dickerer's smile faded as it came, as the poet says, and his hair stood up, and turning to the brakeman he says:

"'Jezecrimini! Stop her! Here's where we get off!'

"'She doesn't even hesitate at a town like this,' said the brakeman.

"Well, about 11 miles on this side, in a strip of country where a crow can't live and where an Indian wouldn't be caught dead, the old iron horse began to slow up. The conductor came through just then and said:

"'Tickets!'

"Well, say, that was a funny sight. Them that had tickets showed up and then went to sleep. But the dickerers began to kick. They said they should have been let off at Oklahoma City. The conductor said the train didn't stop at Oklahoma, that it wasn't scheduled to stop there, and that he wasn't going to go back that trip. The leader of the dickerers for cheap fares wanted to know what was to be done.

"The conductor was an old timer. He had a face on him like a woman who never loved anybody. He just told them, 'Pay or get off.' Then they asked him where they could pay to. And he said the train wouldn't stop any more until it got to Kansas City the next morning unless it stopped to put them off. And he reached up and caught the bellcord.

"And every one of the dickerers paid to Kansas City. And, of course, under the railroad law, they paid more than they would have paid if they had bought tickets at Purcell. And the company was that much ahead. And that's what I mean when I say that the hardest man to do is a live railroad man."—New York Sun.

He—Do you know there is a trick in riding a wheel? She—Of course I do; I tumbled first thing.

FORTUNES LOST BY GAMBLERS.

Millions that Change Hands on the Turn of a Card.

Benson, the jubilee plunger, thought it worth while to write or have written for him a book telling how, in 1887, he spent and gambled away a fortune of £250,000. Yet Benson's was by no means a record; indeed, if a list of the biggest losses in a single year by gamblers were compiled it would be found that Benson would not be in the first hundred.

The famous Lady Castlemaine was one of the most notorious gamblers of her day. Pepys, in his amusing diary, tells us that in a single night her losses amounted to over £25,000, and that, too, in a time, be it remembered, when money had two or three times its present purchasing power.

Nell Gwynne, actress and court favorite, beggared herself times over and over again at the gaming table. Her contemporary, the Duchess of Mazarin, niece of the famous cardinal of that name, raised in many days large sums of money, always to lose them in the card room.

Charles James Fox, as well as being a great statesman, was a notorious gambler. He lost enormous sums, and managed to get through several fortunes. His own estate and fortune passed out of his hands very early, and then Lord Holland paid for him £140,000 to rid him of his debts.

Fortunes that came to him afterward by marriage were similarly gambled away in the gambling clubs of St. James and Pall Mall. Fox always took his beating like a man; he was the coolest gambler of a gambling age, and watched the turn up of a card on which thousands depended with an apparent stoic indifference.

The clubs at the end of the last century were hotbeds of gambling. Lord Stavordale lost £11,000 at one sitting at Almack's one night, and was rising to go when the winner offered to throw him the dice for double or quits; Lord Stavordale did so and won.

At the Cocoa Tree, a famous club in its day, there was in 1780 one famous evening, of which the records are still preserved, when a sum of £180,000 depended on a single hazard.

As an instance of the enormous sums lost even early in this century, it may be stated that the club known as Crockford's was started in 1827 by a fishmonger of that name; by keeping a hazard bank he retired in 1840, twice over a millionaire.

To come to more recent times, the late Lord Waterford lost on the turf, and by his eccentric wagers, immense sums, the precise amount of which it would be impossible to set down. The Marquis of Hastings plunged till he became at once the terror and the joy of the racing fraternity. His losses on "Hermit's Derby" were considerably over £100,000.

When Abington Baird died it was computed that his losses on the turf alone amounted to close on half a million.—Tit-Bits.

Retaining a Seat.

A judgment of the greatest importance and interest to railway travelers was delivered recently by Judge Emden. A gentleman traveling from London to Hastings had occasion to leave the carriage at Tunbridge Wells, and took the ordinary precaution of reserving his seat with his umbrella and newspapers. While he was absent another passenger seized his place and refused to vacate it until forcibly ejected. As a result an action for damages was brought against the original owner of the seat by the intruder, and a counter-claim for similar damages was entered by the other side as well. The judgment delivered was one which will commend itself to ninety-nine out of every hundred travelers. The claim for damages for ejectment was dismissed and the counter-claim allowed.

For the future, therefore, the cantankerous individual who persists in disturbing the comfort and convenience of travelers in the manner indicated will know how he stands, and that if the owner of the seat thinks fit to bundle him out neck and crop the latter will not only have the sympathy of the public but the law as well on his side. There can be no question whatever that the universal mode of retaining a seat in a railway carriage is a most reasonable and convenient one, and the thanks of the public are due to Judge Emden for his very clear and sensible interpretation of the law. Not the least important point in his judgment is his assertion that the holder of a seat was entitled to use reasonable force to eject an intruder.—London Globe.

A Fortunate Accident.

In a splendid room in the palace of Potsdam, one of the decorations is the figure of a large spider wrought in gold. An interesting tradition attaches to this piece of work. It commemorates an incident in the life of Frederick William, the grand-uncle of the present Emperor of Germany. An attempt had been made to poison him in a cup of chocolate. By chance a spider fell into the cup, and for this reason the beverage was given to a dog, who immediately upon taking it died. The cook was afterward hanged, and the golden spider in the Potsdam palace immortalizes the incident.

Strange Chinese Law.

If a Chinaman dies while being tried for murder, the very fact of his dying is taken as evidence of his guilt. He has departed, but somebody must suffer, and his eldest son, if he has one, is sent to prison for a year. If he has no son, then his father or brother gets a flogging. It's all in the family, and justice must be administered.

Told the Truth Once.

Nuwed—According to you, I never told you a single truth before we were married.

Mrs. Nuwed—Oh, George; you weren't quite so bad as all that. Don't you remember you always used to say you were unworthy of me?—Life.

She Was Not to Be Caught.

Mr. Bigler—I see we're liable to have a powder famine.

Mrs. Bigler—Mercy, William, is that so? I must run right over to the drug store and get half a dozen boxes.

A Rare Bird.

"I used to think that Paisley wasn't much of a patriot, but I've changed my mind."

"Why? Has he enlisted?"

"No, but he doesn't pretend to know more than the authorities at Washington do about the way this war should be conducted."

A Mistake.

"How do you do, Miss Leslie? So awfully glad to see you again. So sorry you weren't at Lady Brown's dance last night. There positively was not one pretty girl in the room!"

"I am not Miss Leslie. But I was at Lady Brown's dance last night!"—London Punch.

Her Reservation.

She—You know, John, when we were married I placed my life entirely in your keeping.

He—No, dear, you are mistaken. You gave me no control whatever over your powers of speech.

No Doubt of It.

Writesum—I think I'll write a popular song. The man who wrote "On the Wabash" made thousands.

Kidder—Tired?—Up To Date.

Doubtful.

Scribbler—I have written a new play and called it "Cash."

Hibbler—I'm afraid you won't be able to produce it.—Up To Date.

Jiggins—Jubley, they tell me you are a lightning calculator.

Jubley—That's what I claim to be.

Jiggins—Then tell me where the next flash of lightning is going to strike, will you?—Galveston News.

Waiter (in quest of a tip)—Is everything satisfactory, sir?

Diner—Everything was until you spoke.—Boston Transcript.

Impudent Minx.

Aunt Abbie—Perhaps you would not believe that your uncle married me for my beauty?

Saucy Niece—Oh, one can believe almost anything of poor, innocent Uncle George.—Indianapolis Journal.

A Paragon.

"Ah, that little widow across the way must be an excellent woman."

"Why?"

"When her husband died none of the neighbors said: 'Well, the poor man can rest at last.'"

A Charitable Wish.

"Yes, she designs all her own dresses."

"Pity she couldn't get somebody else to wear 'em."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Musical Hint.

She—Do you like singing?

He—I was always carried away with it.

She—I will sing.—Detroit Free Press.

The Worm Turns.

"Hah, proud Hannah Hopkins, yer scorn me now, but wait till I goes ter de war an kill er tousan Spaniards an git made er general or somethin, an den we'll see who's who?"—New York Journal.

Approval at Last.

"Johnson has finally done something that all who know him will applaud."

"You don't say! What is it?"

"He has decided to move away."

Beginning Early.

"I have heard a good deal about people who borrow trouble, but I think my wife is a champion in that line."

"Why, I thought she was always cheerful and contented with her lot?"

"She was until our baby was born, six weeks ago. Now she is worrying because he may marry some girl that we will not like."

Bad Either Way.

Gladys—Don't go, George! Don't leave me! Don't run the risk of losing your life and leaving me to mourn for you all the rest of my days. How can I endure the anxiety, knowing that you are in danger!"

George—There, darling, don't worry. It's all right. I'm going into the commissary department.

His Only Fear.

"I want a gentle horse for my wife to drive," said the prospective purchaser. "Can you recommend this one?"

"Yes, indeed!" replied the owner; "there is not a safer horse for a lady to be found anywhere, and there is but one thing he's afraid of."

"And what is that?" asked the other.

"He is awfully afraid some one will say 'whoa' to him and he won't hear it," replied the conscientious owner.

Reversed.

"My life was spoiled, lady," said the traveler, "by my wife's cooking."

"Was it so very bad?"

"No, lady; it was good. So good that my friends ate me out of house and home."—New York Evening Journal.

Tactful.

An Arcadia lady the other evening had company who tarried beyond the usual bedtime of the young hopeful of the family; thereupon he remarked: "Ma, let's go to bed; these folks want to go home."—Arcadia (Ind.) Arcadian.

Not Yet.

"I would like you to write me a policy," said the man who was about to depart for Cuba.

"Not on your life!" exclaimed the insurance agent.—Philadelphia North American.

Not in This Country.

He—Poverty may not be pleasant, but we can, at least, make it respectable.

She—Where?

A Side Swipe.

He—What an intelligent-looking girl that Miss Smartleigh is.

She—Yes; but, for goodness sake, don't let her hear you. She really thinks she is pretty.

How She Guessed.

Maud—Don't you think these new pictures of me are lovely?

Marie—They are, indeed. Who took them—De Camera?

Maud—Yes. What made you think he took them?

Marie—I see he is advertising that he has the most skillful retoucher in town.

After the Wedding.

"Why did you say no the first time I asked you to be mine?"

"I wanted to guard against the danger of becoming the wife of a man who had no perseverance."

A Wronged Man.

Parker—You've been talking for several months past about the woes of the Cubans and demanding that this country go to war for the purpose of setting them free, but your sympathy doesn't seem to have led you to do anything substantial toward putting an end to the trouble.

Hawksley—That's just where you're away off, like all the rest of the cowards who have advocated peace; I paid out $3.00 for stuff that my wife is using to make a battle flag for the regiment that is being recruited here.

Heredity.

She (after the battle)—I can't imagine where our Fritz got his amiable temper.

He—Oh, from you without doubt, for I still have mine!—Heitere Welt.

The Mean Thing.

She—Yes, dearest, I made this cake all alone.

He—I can't believe that. Somebody must, at least, have helped you lift it out of the oven.

Too Lonesome for Them.

Tenant—You'll have to reduce the rent or get the authorities to assign a new policeman to our district.

Landlord—What's the matter? I always supposed it was a very quiet neighborhood.

Tenant—It's quiet enough, but the policeman on that beat is a married man and we have to pay our girls extra high wages on that account to get them to stay.

Appreciative.

Mr. Van Metre—I hope you received the volume of my poems that I sent you?"

Miss Fickley—Yes, I was awfully glad to get it. I have placed it on a table in the drawing-room.

Mr. Van Metre—Indeed! I feel highly honored.

Miss Fickley—I think the binding is a real work of art.

Moral: Stop First and Think.

She—You say I am the first girl you ever made love to, but your manner indicates that you have had experience.

He—Please explain how you know that.

After he had gone she was almost tempted to jab herself with her hatpin.

A Meteorite that Paid a Mortgage.

An illustration of uses to which meteorites may be put before their real character is known is afforded by those of Kiowa County, Kansas. They fell, says a writer in St. Nicholas, on a prairie where rocks were scarce and valuable, and the farmers of the vicinity found meteorites convenient for holding down haystacks, stable roofs, or covers to rain barrels. For such purposes they might have been used for a long time had not the wife of one of the farmers become convinced that there was something unusual about them and called an expert to examine them. He at once recognized their nature, and the enterprising woman finally sold hers to seekers after curios and to scientific schools for enough to pay off a heavy mortgage upon the farm.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Truth.—The soul lives by truth and is nourished and developed by truth.—Rev. Father Mackey, Catholic, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Love and Duty.—Love makes the best of every condition; love is the guarantee of duty.—Rev. Charles M. Shepard, Presbyterian, Evanston, Wyo.

Ideals.—We are the missionaries of the ideal, the conscience of the universe, the soul of which nature is but the body.—M. Mangasarian, Ethical Culture, Chicago, Ill.

The Home.—A house with fine appointments is not a home, but the oneness of purpose, the love and confidence bestowed make the home.—Rev. F. H. Lewis, Methodist, Baltimore, Md.

Music and Heaven.—The nearer one gets to heaven the more he likes music. The only time Jesus sang was just before he was taken by the soldiers.—Dwight L. Moody, Evangelist, New York City.

The Average Man.—An average man may by persistent employment of average faculties come to achieve genius, come to be a class out of the ordinary, come to be a leader.—Rev. Thomas Van Ness, Baptist, Boston, Mass.

The Soul.—A pool of water is a thing of beauty when the moon shines on it, and the smallest soul that ever breathed is a miracle when the spirit of God is reflected therein.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York City.

The Sayings of Jesus.—Jesus' sayings impress us not as the excogitatino of the student, but as the inspirations that have come to one lying under broad trees or sitting on mountain tops to think.—Rev. Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

Godlike Acts.—Never do we perform an act more like to the godlike act of our heavenly father than when we cause the flowers of joy and gladness to grow in hearts that were barren and desolate before.—Cardinal Gibbons, Catholic, New Orleans, La.

Individualities.—We are made from varying materials like the parts of the organ's mechanism, and the lesson of its harmonious workings to a great result teaches us to respect our own individualities.—Bishop Henry C. Potter, Episcopalian, New York City.

Harmony.—Let our conduct harmonize with our knowledge of the mysteries of God, and so living in obedience to his precepts make certain our life of happiness through the endless ages.—Rev. M. G. Ryan, Episcopalian, San Francisco, Cal.

Making a Church.—Put the Christlife into two or three men and women and you have the vital nucleus of a church. You cannot make a church of a thousand ceremonial automatons. The key to the kingdom of heaven is a life, and the church must keep pace with a Christ who is alive forevermore.—Rev. W. T. Hutchins, Evangelist, Indian Orchard, Mass.

Of Society.—Society as a whole needs religion and morality for the development of the highest civilization and culture. Without the proper working of these two factors a human brotherhood marked by tolerance and the absence of hatred is impossible.—Rev. Dr. William Rosenau, Hebrew, Baltimore, Md.

Men and Scholars.—The object of the day is not to make scholars less scholarly, but to bring it to their hearts that the whole attitude of the Scripture upon the matter means that it is the order of the divine intention that a man should be a man before he is a scholar.—Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Presbyterian, New York City.

Youth.—A decision for the right in youth means a peaceful old age and a triumphant end. The bird of earthly love now singing in bowers of youth at the bridal altar and in the home circle shall be transformed into the bird of paradise, trilling the music of heaven.—Rev. Dr. T. M. Grith, Methodist, Philadelphia, Pa.

NEW TOY FOR THE NAVY.

Some of Our Sailors Would Enjoy Using It on the Spaniards.

Here is a toy for the navy—one which some of the navy's men would enjoy playing with. It is a Dreggs-Schroeder six-pound rifle. It can fire thirty-three shots a minute, and its projectile can pierce three inches of steel at a distance of three miles. It is the new gun which has just been placed on the revenue cutter Gresham. It will be in charge of Gunner Finn, who has been on the old cutter Andrew Jackson and on the Gresham for twenty-six years. The Gresham has only one six-pounder rifle, but she could easily increase her armament by four or five more. She has a speed of twenty-one miles an hour. But her chief weapon of offense is her torpedo tube.

Pretty Japanese Custom.

At the birth of a Japanese baby a tree is planted, which must remain untouched till the marriage of the child. When that hour arrives the tree is cut down and a skilled cabinetmaker transforms the wood into furniture, which is always cherished by the young couple as the most beautiful of the ornaments in the house.

Mrs. Hortor (whose daughter is at the piano)—They tell me you have an ear for music, Mr. Humaner. Humaner—Yes; but by all means let your daughter go on with her playing and not mind me.—Boston Transcript.

Poultry Notes.

Clean out the feed troughs daily.

It is well to feed a mash at all seasons.

Never throw soft feed on the ground.

When hot weather comes stop feeding corn.

Do not expect eggs from overcrowded flocks.

Underfed or overfed hens are poor layers.

Beans make a very excellent food for the hens.

Fermented food will kill chicks, and does kill many.

Serious consequences will result from not supplying grit to confined flocks.

If you want eggs and meat, too, the Plymouth Rock will do the business.

Feed-troughs should be large enough to give all the fowls opportunity to feed.

There is more in giving the chicks good care than there is in the kind of feed.

Keep your dust-box full of dry dust and keep it where the hens can get at it at will.

Clean that hen house from top to bottom. Do it thoroughly, and do not put it off another day.

Early moulting makes early layers. This is the advantage of saving the earliest-hatched pullets.

"Heavens?" shrieked the heroine; "I am undone!" "Come away, Sil!" audibly remarked the old lady in the audience, as she arose; "I ain't a going to watch any disrobin' act!"

ANECDOTE AND INCIDENT

When Tom Sheridan was reading Euclid with his tutor, he found it very tedious, and after a time he asked: "Was Euclid a good man?" The tutor did not know. "Was he an honorable, truthful man?" "We know nothing to the contrary." "Then don't you think we might take his word for all this?"

When the Athenaeum Club was first founded, Croker, one of its founders, was urgent that no man should be admitted who had not in some way distinguished himself in literature. Soon after he proposed the Duke of Wellington, when some one said: "The duke has never written a book." "True," replied Croker; "but he is a capital hand at reviews."

A clever remark made at a London dinner not long ago is reported by the Bazar's correspondent. They were talking of George Alexander, the English actor, and some one remarked that his real name was Samson. "What a pity," said a lady, "that he doesn't keep it! It's such a good name for a player. Samson was the first actor who brought down the house!"

A Scotchman living in London recently ran across two of his countrymen, and took them with him to a big public dinner. In his hospitality he sent to their table champagne, and yet more champagne, and after a time went to see personally how they were faring. He found them depressed. "How are you getting on?" he asked. The reply came: "Oh, we're gettin' on fine, but we're verra fateeggit with thae mineral waters."

A judge of the Bombay high court, who is pompous in manner and never forgets that he is a judge, was walking up and down the platform of a small railway station up-country just before taking his seat in the train. At that moment a hot and perspiring Englishman rushed on to the platform and said to the judge: "Is this the Bombay train?" The judge coldly remarked: "I am not the station master." The other man at once retorted: "Then, confound you, sir, why do you swagger about as if you were?"

The celebrated Massimo family in Rome, who claim descent from Quintus Fabius Maximus, the dictator, have just celebrated, as they do annually, the anniversary of the restoration to life of Paolo Massimo, who died in 1583 and was miraculously revived by St. Philip Neri. It was to the grandfather of the present Prince Massimo that Napoleon put the question: "And are you so sure you really are descended from Quintus Fabius Maximus?" "Well," answered the prince calmly, "they have been saying so here in Rome for the last two thousand years."

A certain novelist, who recently received from a lady an unstamped letter asking the loan of his book, on the plea that she could not obtain it at the booksellers' in her own town, sent her a reply worded as follows: "Dear Madam: In the town where you reside there appears to be a lack of all sorts of things which are easily procurable elsewhere—not only my recent work, but also of postage stamps for letters. I have in my possession, it is true, the book you desire to obtain, and also the stamps to pay its carriage, but, to my regret, I am without the necessary string to make it into a parcel. If you can supply me with a piece I am at your service."

A temperance lecturer once addressed an unconvinced audience in Kentucky, and when he made the announcement that the effect of alcohol is to shorten life, he was astonished to see an old man rise at the back of the hall and shout, "You're a liar!" "Why?" inquired the advocate of Adam's ale. "Because, sir, I've been drinking for seventy-five years, and I'm ninety and am likely to live to be 100. I am strong enough to lick you if you'll step outside." "Oh, no doubt, sir. You're an exception, sir. If you keep on drinking"——the lecturer paused. "What?" asked the impatient old toper. "If you keep on drinking, you'll have to be shot on judgment day."

When the Methodist conference at Lawrence, Kan., was almost ready to close, some of the ministers were discussing the appointments, and agreed among themselves that everything was coming out satisfactorily, the appointments having been all fixed up. Then another preacher bade his brethren not to be too sure. "For," said he, "I was in conference with Bishop Fowler once, and we fixed everything up, and then the bishop asked to be allowed to commune with God awhile. The rest of us retired, and from the condition in which we found the appointments when we came back, I should say that, if the bishop talks with God again today, he is likely to break that slate of ours into pieces so small that we can't write our names on 'em."

Sir William Rowan Hamilton, professor of astronomy in the Dublin University, used to recall, with a humorous melancholy, his first meeting with his predecessor, Bishop Brinkley, when, said he, "I am afraid I offended him." Hamilton was a youth of eighteen, and sat next him at some public luncheon. They did not speak, and the younger man felt that good manners required him to break the silence. His eye happened to rest on a large map of Van Diemen's Land, hanging on the wall. "My lord," said he, turning to the bishop, "were you ever in Botany Bay?" The bishop turned to him with a look of severe displeasure. "Eat your soup, sir!" thundered the old gentleman; "eat your soup!" And then it occurred to Hamilton that the bishop thought he was asking whether he had ever been "transported," for at that time Botany Bay was where desperate criminals were sent.

MISTAKES OF INSECTS.

Present Day Naturalists Deny That They Reason.

Few scientific prejudices have been more difficult to overcome than that which removes from animals the reasoning faculty, and probably many years will yet elapse before it will be recognized that all animals which come under ordinary observation are endowed with the same kind of faculty, although developed in various degrees of a descending scale, which distinguishes man and the so-called higher organisms. The bee and ant have been frequently held up as the best exponents of the instinct class, and more recently of the "exceptional" animals which developed reasoning powers; and it was a rude shock, not only to the layman, but as well to the scientist, when Sir John Lubbock, as the result of an almost endless series of experiments, announced a few years ago that these animals were "sadly wanting" both in their instinctive and intellectual traits. In other words, there were many times when both instinct and intelligence erred for them.

Some most remarkable instances of the erring of instinct among insects have frequently been noted by naturalists, and they add an interesting chapter to the physiology of sense. One of these was the case of a butterfly, which persisted in visiting the artificial flowers on a lady's bonnet, mistaking them for the natural product. Another, and perhaps more striking, instance of fault is noted by the distinguished French entomologist, M. R. Blanchard, and concerns a species of sphinx moth, which entered a hotel room in the half obscurity of early morning, and was found to flit with direct intent to definite parts of walls and ceilings. These were decorated with paintings of leaves and flowers, and to the latter the insect approached in repeated attacks, thrusting forward its proboscis, as though intent upon intruding it into the opened cups of the beguiling flowers. After repeated failures and the resulting discouragement, the effort was given up, and the sphinx escaped by the window. This case of self-deception is interesting in another way, inasmuch as it proves that it is not always the sense of smell, but at times that of sight, which directs insects to their flowers.—Washington Star.

Mysterious Defects in Engines.

Defects often develop in steam engines and other machines that are very mysterious in their origin, and call for great ingenuity in detecting the cause. Unless a man in charge of an engine develops habits of close observation he is likely to be easily beaten when anything unusual takes place.

We read lately of a tendency to run away of a Corliss engine, which was a great mystery for a time. The engine would speed up for a few moments without any apparent cause and drop back to its normal speed without anything being done. The engine was taken apart and examined carefully, and particular attention was devoted to the governor, but nothing wrong could be found. One day, while the engineer was looking at the engine, it suddenly speeded up about fifty revolutions above the normal, and before the steam could be shut off it dropped back to the regular speed. The engine was stopped, the governor again taken apart, the valve mechanism examined and a minute inspection made over the whole machine and nothing could be found the matter.

Some of the people about were beginning to think that this erratic engine was acting outside of natural laws and that a real mystery surrounded the tendency to run away. By accident the engineer grasped the governor belt and was surprised to find that the pulley turned on the shaft. The pulley was of the common kind, made in two pieces and bolted together, being held to the shaft by the friction of the parts. The bolts had worked loose and permitted the pulley to turn on the shaft at short intervals.

When hearing about this mystery the surprise we experienced was that the engineer did not thoroughly examine that pulley after he had looked at the governor.

Tabby Takes the Elevator.

The Philadelphia bourse is the home of a very intelligent cat. This tabby, which is coal black, without a single white spot upon her, has a fondness for traveling in the elevator. She is perfectly at home there, and travels up and down many times daily. She goes to the door of the elevator shaft and mews until the car comes along and takes her on. The various elevator men are very careful of her, for she is a great mouser, and in the bourse, as in other big buildings, mice are troublesome. These little pests frequently destroy valuable documents supposedly safely stowed away in desks and drawers. Tabby notifies the elevator men what floor she desires to get off upon by mewing loudly as the car comes to the particular story. In this way she makes a tour of inspection of the entire building.—Philadelphia Record.

Weeds Killed by Electricity.

Electricity is used to destroy weeds in a new device which can be used on an ordinary mowing machine, one wire of the dynamo being attached to the cutting bar and the other grounded through one of the wheels, so that if the weeds are cut when damp a current of electricity enters each root and burns it as the top is cut.

The Dignity of Life.

HOW trivial seem the circumstances that sometimes unexpectedly come to us, and give, under the providence of God, direction and impulse to our lives! Truly we "live and move and have our being" in God. The slightest change in our human relations, the falling of an autumnal leaf, the shadows lengthening around us at eventide, the pale, sad face of the sufferer whom we casually meet by the way—these, with ten thousand other incidents in life, are profoundly significant. God watches every one of them. Intent upon our highest good, He approaches us and influences us by the smallest events; nothing is overlooked by Him. His ordering of our minutest affairs is always in love. And these slightest variations in our human lives, so insignificant—less visible in their effects than the unobserved ripple that breaks upon the shore—are suddenly invested with wondrous meaning when we rightly view them. These variations are made, in the divine thought, the connecting links through which our whole subsequent lives become resplendent.

When we go forth each day to our appointed tasks, what consecration and divine trusts should mark our choices! How near to Him should we live! How painstaking to seize all those little threads of influence which are secretly woven into the texture of life; little in human thought, but mighty, so often, in the formation of character in ourselves and others! How can we live a single hour without prayer? How we ought to cherish habits of charity toward all, increasing the sum of human happiness by our godly cheerfulness, stimulating the virtuous, helping the weak, sympathizing with the distressed, advocating the cause of the oppressed! In this way it will be found that the Master meets us daily in the way, going before us in everything to direct our steps. Thus, in companionship with Him, we shall be always ready to hear Him speak the final words: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!"

Living at Our Best.

Do not try to do a great thing; you may waste all your life waiting for the opportunity which may never come. But since little things are always claiming your attention, do them as they come, from a great motive, for the glory of God, to win his smile of approval, and to do good to men. It is harder to plod on in obscurity, acting thus, than to stand on the high places of the field, within the view of all, and to do deeds of valor at which rival armies stand still to gaze. But no such act goes without the swift recognition and the ultimate recompense of Christ.

To fulfill faithfully the duties of your station; to use to the utternost the gifts of your ministry; to bear chafing annoyances and trivial irritations as martyrs bore the pillory and stake; to find the one noble trait in people who try to molest you; to put the kindest construction on unkind acts and words; to love with the love of God even the unthankful and evil; to be content to be a fountain in the midst of a wild valley of stones, nourishing a few lichens and wild flowers, or now and again a thirsty sheep; and to do this always, and not for the praise of man, but for the sake of God—this makes a great life.—F. B. Meyer.

A Little Sermon.

Be strong to hope, O Heart!
Though day is bright,
The stars can only shine
In the dark night.
Be strong, O heart of mine,
Look toward the light.

Be strong to bear, O Heart!
Nothing is vain;
Strive not, for life is care,
And God sends pain;
Heaven is above, and there
Rest will remain!

Be strong to love, O Heart!
Love knows not wrong;
Didst thou love, creatures even
Life were not long;
Didst thou love God in heaven,
Thou wouldst be strong.

—Adelaide Anne Proctor.

The Making of Character.

Do not let us suppose that character requires great circumstances for the making. Character can be made in poor circumstances. There are huge manufactories in this country, with magnificent machinery, with chimneys belching forth clouds of black smoke, to pollute the air, where they turn out carpets of most wonderful aspects, which would almost make you ill to look at, and which perish quickly in the using. Far away in the East, in some poor little hut, an Eastern workman is working with threads of many colors beside him; he has been toiling for years, and when he has finished he will have turned out a single square of such beautiful coloring and such perfect workmanship that when it comes to this country it will be bought at a great price, and the owner's great grandchildren will see it fresh and beautiful. So much for the great manufactory and the whirling wheels and the noise and the smoke; so much for the quietness and obscurity of a single workman!—Rev. John Watson, D. D. (Ian Maclaren).

Attentive to Duty.

"Are you not afraid to live here?" said a visitor to a lighthouse keeper. "It is a dreadful place to be constantly in."

"No," replied the man, "I am not afraid; we never think of ourselves here."

"Never think of yourselves! How is that?"

"We know that we are perfectly safe, and only think of having our lamps brightly burning, and keeping the reflectors clear, so that those in danger may be saved."

That is what Christians ought to do. They are safe in a house built on a Rock which cannot be moved by the wildest storm; and, in a spirit of holy unselfishness, they should let their light gleam across the dark waters of sin, that they who are imperiled may be guided into the harbor of eternal safety.—Ram's Horn.

What to Say in Trouble.

In time of trouble say:

First—He brought me here; it is by his will that I am in this straight place; in that I will rest.

Next—He will keep me in his love, and give me grace in this trial to behave as his child.

Then—He will make the trial a blessing—teaching me the lessons he means me to learn, and working in me the grace he intends for me.

Last—In his own good time he can bring me out again—and how and when he knows.

Say: I am here—1. By God's appointment. 2. In his keeping. 3. Under his training. 4. For his time.—Rev. Andrew Murray.

Convert Making Truth.

There can be no effective gospel ministry without the atonement of Calvary. There can be no truly successful missionary or evangelical operations without the blood of the Crucified. There can be no soul-saving work in the home, or in the Sabbath school, or in the church or in the community, where the atonement of Christ is ignored or despised. Only he who truly and fully presents and magnifies the sacrifice of Christ has the assurances of a harvest of salvation benefits.—Presbyterian.

Prayer Better than Worry.

There is not much gain in thinking about the things over which one can have no control. It is better to leave them prayerfully with God. The man who tries to think of such things worries. He is worried about his health and about the weather and about his family, and about the wickedness of the world, until he has learned the lesson of prayer. Then he does the best he can each day and leaves the rest with God.

Truth Is Truth.

There are times in the history of every individual, as well as every church, where things look blue. When there is a going back on the truth once attained, and when the ordinances of worship are corrupted, and when men who once spoke out against the inroads of corruption become silent as the grave, it looks blue for the rest of the faithful ones. But no matter who comes or who goes, truth is truth, and God is true to it.—Christian Instructor.

Subjects of Thought.

Ennui is a malady for which the only remedy is work; pleasure is only a palliation.

They pass best over the world who trip over it quickly, for it is but a bog—if we stop we sink.

If we could be happy, we should open our ears when among the good and shut them when among the bad.

What men want is not talent, it is purpose; in other words, not the power to achieve, but the will to labor.

True goodness is like the glowworm in this, that it shines most when no eyes except those of heaven are upon it.

Temperance and labor are the two best physicians of men; labor sharpens the appetite, and temperance prevents him from indulging in excess.

Studying human nature from a disinterested point of view is one thing. Remarking its rise and fall from an interested standpoint is another.

Consciousness of error is to a certain extent a consciousness of understanding; and correction of error is the plainest proof of energy and mastery.

There is a great difference between being in the world and having the world in us. Let a ship be in the water and it is all right, but let the water be in the ship and down she goes.

No man lives without jostling and being jostled. In all ways he has to elbow himself through the world, giving and taking offense. His life is a battle in so far as it is an entity at all.

Man postpones or remembers. He does not live in the present, but with reverted eye laments the past, or, heedless of the riches that surround him, stands on tiptoe to foresee the future. He cannot be happy and strong until he, too, lives with nature in the present above time.

Heroes of principle are the demand of the hour—men who believe something and who will not swerve from what they believe, and who are not time-servers, weather cocks, fickle and variable; these are the characters most necessary to-day to the stability and progress of society.

It is a very poor record when night comes if we have been spending every hour of the day with our thoughts bent wholly upon our own pleasure or profit. If this is a sad way to spend one day, how much worse is it when we spend a week, a month, a year, selfishly bent upon our own affairs.

The Oldest Animal on Earth.

In the days when Elizabeth was at the height of her power there was born a turtle in the island of Aldabra, which is situate between Madagascar and Mozambique. That tortoise is still alive and in good health. Shakspeare, Cecil, Raleigh and Essex have voted with the silent majority, but the turtle is still only a possibility of steaks and soup. He is the oldest living animal on the face of the earth. For a century and a half he has been in the possession of a family in Mauritius, whose ancestors brought him from his native Aldabra. Experts say that he is at least 300 years old. Besides being the oldest animal alive, he is the largest turtle in the world and measures 5 feet 6 inches over his shell. When he stands up he is 3 feet high and the breadth of his shell is 2 feet 6 inches.

A Brave Act Rewarded.

Mr. Edison, who is known all over the world as a great electrician, was a poor boy. He sold newspapers, he ran errands, he did everything an honest boy could do to support himself. The following story, relating to an event in his boyhood, shows that he was a brave boy.

One summer forenoon, while the train was being taken apart and made up anew, a car was uncoupled and sent down the track with no brakeman to control it. Edison, who had been looking at the fowls in the poultry yard, turned just in time to see little Jimmie on the main track throwing pebbles over his head, utterly unconscious of danger.

He dropped his papers on the platform, seized the child in his arms, and threw himself off the track, face downward, in sharp, fresh gravel ballast, without a second to spare. As it was, the wheel of the car struck the heel of his boot.

"I was in the ticket office," says the child's father, "and, hearing a shriek, ran out in time to see the train hands bringing the two boys to the platform."

Having no other way of showing his gratitude, the agent said:

"Al, if you will stop off here four days in the week, and keep Jimmie out of harm's way until the mixed train returns from Detroit, I will teach you telegraphing."

"Will you?" said Edison.

"I will."

He extended his hand and said: "It's a bargain," and so Edison became a telegrapher.—Selected.

"Goldie-dear," My Latest Pet.

Guess what he is, children. He has pretty, bright wings; yet he is not a bird. He eats honey like a bee; but he has no sting. He washes his face like a kitten; yet is no cat. His head is something like that of a grasshopper; but he cannot jump. What can he be? He has a proboscis-like tube through which he eats, and he walks on four legs like an elephant; yet he is only a beautiful butterfly, with a black spot on each wing!

He flew into my room one warm spring day, when I had doors and windows open. But the very next day it snowed, and poor Goldie had to remain a prisoner. For a full week the weather kept very cold, and he sat motionless on the sitting-room window, where he could get what sunshine there was. But by and by he began to droop, and I began to wonder if he was not hungry. But what could I give him to eat? Did butterflies eat honey like bees? I asked.

It certainly would do no harm to try, and as I had none in the house I boiled some sugar and water together in a spoon, and as soon as it was cool gave him a drop. Presently Goldie stuck out a long tube, like a thin stick, only hollow; this he put right into the sweet drop, and sucked till he had enough. Then he curled it up like a tiny watch-spring and tucked it away (I think under his nose), and began washing his face with both forefeet at once. This done, he began to fly about the window-panes, as if he wanted to get out, but I did not let him, as he was better off indoors while it was so cold.

It does not do to handle a butterfly, so in the evening I always made him walk on a bit of thin board, and set it with him on the mantelpiece in the warmest part of the room. He then would fold his wings up straight, and remain till morning.

By and by I got him some honey, and thought I had done great things for him; but it must have been too sweet for him, or else he ate too much of it (he did not tell me which), for he died soon after—Youth's Companion.

Out of the Mouths of Babes.

Willie, aged 4, had a new baby brother. The first time he saw him he walked around him two or three times viewing him critically and asked: "Say, mamma, what did that kid say when the barber sheared all his hair off?"

Harry, aged 5, was reading aloud to his mother about a ship and came across a passage saying: "And she steamed down the river." "Why is a ship called 'she,' Harry?" asked his mother. "Well, I guess it's because she has to have a man to boss her," was the reply.

"Oh, papa," exclaimed little 4-year-old Ned, "look what a bright star!" "Yes," replied the mather, "and it is three times as large as our earth." "Oh, no, it isn't," said Ned. "Why do you doubt it?" asked his father. "Because if it was it would keep the rain off," was the logical reply.

Little 3-year-old Bessie was watching her mother drive a nail one day, when the latter accidentally bruised her thumb and exclaimed: "Oh, my gracious!" "Why did 'ou say zat?" asked Bessie. "I don't know. What should I say?" queried her mother. "Well," said Bessie, after a moment's reflection, "'ou might say ze 'mandments."

The little 4-year-old daughter of a minister was visiting and at dinner found the carving was about to begin without the customary grace. Calling out loudly: "Wait a minute," she folded her hands and, bowing her head, repeated "Now I lay me," etc., all the way through. This done, she raised her head and waving her hand to the carver, said: "Now you can let her go."

There is a little 5-year-old girl in Chicago who evidently appreciates her mother partly because she is her mother and partly because of self-appreciation. "Mamma," she said the other morning, "guess what Mabel's mamma said about you at the party last night." "I don't know, I'm sure. What was it, dear?" asked her mother. "Why," was the reply, "she said you was the sweetest little girl's mother in Chicago."

A STATESMAN OF RUSSIA.

How a Great Reaction Was Caused by Constantine Pobedonostzeff.

Ambassador Andrew D. White contributes to the Century a sketch of "A Statesman of Russia," Constantine Pobedonostzeff, Procurator-General of the Most Holy Synod. After speaking of the death of Alexander II. at the time when he was granting liberal institutions, Mr. White says

At his death the sturdy young guardsman became the Emperor Alexander III. It is related by men conversant with Russian affairs that at the first meeting of the imperial councilors, Loris-Melikoff, believing that the young sovereign would be led by filial reverence to continue the liberal policy to which the father had devoted his life, made a speech taking this for granted, and that the majority of the councilors seemed fully in accord with him, when suddenly there arose in the council this tall, gaunt, scholarly man, who, at first very simply, but finally with burning eloquence, presented a different view.

According to the chroniclers of the period, Pobedonostzeff told the Emperor that all so-called liberal measures, including the constitution, were a delusion; that, however such things might be suited to Western Europe, they were not suited to Russia; that the constitution of that empire had been from time immemorial the will of the autocrat, directed by his own sense of responsibility to the Almighty; that no other constitution was possible in Russia; that this alone was fitted to the traditions, the laws, the ideas of the hundred millions of various races under the sway of the Russian scepter; that in other parts of the world constitutional liberty, so called, had already shown itself an absurdity—socialism, with its plots and bombs, appearing in all quarters, attempts making against rulers of nations everywhere, and the best of presidents having been assassinated in the very country where free institutions were supposed to have taken the most complete hold. He insisted that the principle of authority in human government was to be saved, and that this principle existed as an effective force only in Russia.

This speech is said to have carried all before it. As its immediate result came the retirement of Loris-Melikoff, followed by his death, not long afterward, upon the Riviera; the entrance of Pobedonostzeff among the most cherished councilors of the Emperor; and, as the consequence of this, the suppression of the constitution, the discouragement of every liberal tendency, and that complete reaction which is in full force at the present hour.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, JULY 22 1898

FOR STATE SENATOR.

Mr. J. J. Cairns of Tulare County will be a candidate for the Republican nomination for State Senator from this district. Mr. Cairns possesses the excellent qualification of not being a politician He is a successful man of business, is not in the "push", has no axe to grind and is not being peddled about by anybody "looking for something". His home papers speak of him as follows:

J. J. Cairns' announcement for State Senator was made in our last issue, but the letter informing us of the fact that he was a candidate came so late that we could make no extended comments. We will therefore add to our former statement, that Mr. Cairns has been a resident of this state for 27 years and of this county since 1881. He was extensively engaged in stock and grain farming until a few years ago, when he turned his attention to fruit raising. Mr. Cairns has alwaws been a leader since we have known him.

In wheat farming Mr. Cairns was always equal to the best, and so it has been in improving his home near Lindsay. As no ditch water could be secured for his ranch he put down wells, and by means of a steam engine and pumps he raised water enough out of the ground to irrigate his land. Orange and olive trees were set out and kept in good growing condition until now he has a magnificent orchard of 100 acres. This led others to adopt the same methods and now, instead of great wheatfields in the vicinity of Lindsay, there are fine orchards irrigated from wells. Lindsay oranges are already becoming known in the city markets, and in the near future the shipments will yield a large revenue. Much of the credit of this improvement is due to Mr. Cairns as he was the pioneer in the movement. As a republican leader Mr Cairns has attended the most, if not all, of the county conventions in the last ten years, and he has been a delegate to five of the State conventions. This has given him an extensive acquaintance throughout the state and will enable him to do more for his constituents than a stranger could possibly do. If the Republicans of Inyo and Kings counties will join Tulare in nominating and electing Mr. Cairns they will have no cause to regret their action as he will make an able and trustworthy Senator.—Porterville Review.

The announcement of J. J. Cairns, of Lindsay, as candidate for State Senator will be found in the column of announcements to-day and henceforth Mr. Cairns will be strictly in the field. Few Republicans are better or more favorably known than Mr. J. J. Cairns. We believe that this is the first time that he ever asked anything from the party, though he has served it long. He is so straight up and down in all his opinions and transactions that he almost leans a little the other way and, if elected to the Senate, it will never be said of him that he catered to any interest or belonged to anybody. He is a Scotchman with a lot of Scotch independence and fight in him and, if nominated, will keep the trail hot all the way up to the closing of the polls.—Tulare Register.

Mr. J. J. Cairns of Lindsey, Tulare county, announces in this issue of the Sentinel that he is a candidate for State Senator from this, the 22d Senatorial District, and asks the support of the Republicans of the district to that end. Mr. Cairns is well known throughout the district by all who have had anything to do with Republican parties for many years past in this valley. He has been a delegate to every Republican convention in Tulare county for the last decade or more and has willingly helped make others candidates, and has ever stood true to the colors. He is a good speaker, a successful farmer and a good man. He has never sought office till now, and does so at the solicitation of many friends.—Hanford Sentinel.

J. J. Cairns, the well-known wheat farmer and orange grower of Lindsay, is a candidate for the Republican nomination for Senator from this district, which embraces the counties of Tulare, Kings and Inyo. Mr. Cairns has lived in this State since 1871 and came to Tulare county seventeen years ago. He was for many years one of the largest grain growers in this county, and every year farmed several thousand acres of land. Later he engaged is fruit growing and has a large orchard, much of which is devoted to oranges, lemons and olives. He has always been noted for his thoroughness, and has to-day one of the best conducted ranches in the county. Mr. Cairns is a staunch Republican and has been prominent in the councils of the party for years. As a central committeeman and as a delegate to State, district and county conventions he has given much time to the party, and his loyalty to its principles cannot be questioned. He has not before asked anything for himself but has often worked for the advancement of others. If elected to represent this district in the Legislature he will work just as industriously for what he believes to be the best interest of the people, and will not swerve from his duty.—Visalia Delta.

The Democratic-Populist fusion State ticket, as nominated by the Convention at Sacramento on the 14th inst., is as follows: Governor, James G. Maguire of San Francisco; Lieutenant-Governor, E. L. Admiral Dewey reports that the Irene, a German cruiser, prevented the insurgents from taking Grand Island, one of the Phillipines. The Raleigh and Concord were sent to investigate and they took the Island and 500 Spanish prisoners. The Irene steamed away through another channel. The intrepid Admiral has orders to deal with the meddlesome Germans as occasion may require, and a big war sensation is looked for.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Hon Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

The Superior Court has been occupied all the week with criminal cases. A list of Jurymen was made returnable on the 19th, and on that day Willie Glenn, an Indian, was tried on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon. It appeared by the testimony that the gun "wasn't loaded," and the defendant was discharged. Ben. H. Yandell Esq. was the attorney for the defendant. The De Barba case was commenced on Wednesday and the venire was exhausted without getting a jury. A special venire of ten was issued, made returnable this morning, from which the twelfth juror has been secured.

A. E. Sutherland returned from Ballarat Tuesday.

Democratic County Central Committee meeting to-night.

S. E. Vermilvea Esq., accompanied by his wife and daughter, is in town.

I. H. Mulholland returned last Monday from the race meeting at Oakland.

The Olancha contingent, Gus. Webb and Ed Walker, are in town attending Court as witnesses.

Mrs. Dodd arrived at Bishop last Monday from Los Angeles. She came by all-rail route, via Sacramento and Reno.

Mrs. W. L. Smith, nee Miss Coyle, accompanied her husband from Bishop last Monday and is visiting friends at Independence.

Judge Lamar and wife, Miss Lizzie Thompson, Lee Bell and John Bell returned a few days ago from a sojourn in the mountains.

R. C. Troeger, Superintendent of the Lane mine at Darwin, was a passenger on last Monday's train. He had been to Los Angeles for a short time and was returning to the mine.

Miss Mattie Wallace left San Francisco last Saturday for home, stopping at Mason Valley en route for a short rest. Miss Wallace was in the Children's Hospital for some time, and has completely regained her health.

In an item last week concerning a possible fusion of the Silver forces reference was made to the form of the "voting list" to be adopted by the Democratic Central Committee. It should have read "voting test," of course.

The Supervisors of Mono county have passed an ordinance segregating the office of Tax and License Collector from that of the Sheriff, so that at the next election the Tax and License Collector will be another officer to vote for in that county.

The Randsburg Miner says that W. K. Miller's stage line between Johannesburg and Ballarat will soon be extended clear through to Keeler, and that Santa Fe road will sell tickets to Keeler via Johannesburg. Very good news, if true. The gap of about 43 miles between Ballarat and Darwin will thus be filled, the road running through Shepherd Canyon and passing what was known as Panamint Junction in early days when stages were flying all over that country. A mail line between Ballarat and Darwin ought to have been established long ago, or at the same time the Ballarat region was given a mail from the south instead of one connecting with its own county seat. The time from Johannesburg to Ballarat is twelve hours, and from Ballarat to the C. & C. terminus at Keeler, via Darwin—some 68 miles—will be about the same, owing to the heavy climb over the Argus Range.

The Trial Jurors.

John F. Beale, Charles Peterson, Leon N. Marx, Michael C. Muldoon, A. W. H. Smith, William J. Lake, Stanton R. Powers, Finley McIver, Harold Preston, Heinrich Glade, Henry Gerken, Walter Scott, William L. Smith, Oscar Dearborn, Charles Houle, David Vaughn, W. P. McMurry, Barton McGee, Philip S. Fartridge, J. G. W. Birchim, Lumford P. Yandell, Julius F. Schroeder, Jarius D. Mairs, A. C. Stevens, Jacob Hodge, John H. Coe, William L. Vaughn, Duncan R. McLaren.

Notice.

The last quarterly Conference of this conference year will be held at Independence M. E. Church on Wednesday, August 3, to commence at 4 o'clock p.m.

All the official board and all interested in church work on the charge are cordially invited to be present.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS.

Never before in the history of the world has there been such a tremendous expenditure for naval work as during the past year by the leading countries of Europe. This means that if the United States is to throw the warnings of her forefathers to the wind, and, ignoring the advice which judgment seems to dictate, is to enter upon a career of territorial aggrandisement as a result of her war with Spain, she, too, will have to increase her naval budgett to a point hitherto undreamed of. Our navy, built and building, is amply strong enough to protect our coast ltne, but if our possessions are to extend to the East and West Indies we must look to be drawn into international complications that will render it imperative for us to have a navy of the very first magnitude.

The flow of water over the Niagara Falls is estimated at 213,000 cubic feet per second, which is equal to 1,593,350 gallons, weighing 16,443,270 pounds.

BIG PINE ITEMS.

BIG PINE, July 19, 1898.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT—Even the torrid heat of our war Summer cannot quench the public spirit or private energy of the dwellers of the hamlet Since my last the carpenters have commenced to hew and saw at the addition to our school house, and D. H. Crocker has nearly completed a fine structure on his lot south of the school premises. The south edge of Piety Flat will soon have the modern adjunct known as a gin-mill; 'ere long a variety of excerpts from divers Italian operas will float out on the wine-laden breeze, and the hamlet's ambition to become a veritable modern town will be realized.

The good people af Big Pine have requested the Democratic and Populist Central Committees to fix the joint convention at the hamlet, confident that the visitors and delegates can be properly entertained on that occasion. The proprietor of the Williams House authorizes the statement that the facilities of his inn are quite sufficient for the emergency. The young people promise some sports for convention time, and an old-time hop. But the main inducement is the pure political atmosphere always on top at the hamlet; let these considerations have their full weight and power at the meeting on the 22d.

Young Bennett McMurry, who met with a serious gun-shot wound through the right hand, four weeks ago, has nearly recovered use of the injured member. The rapid recovery is due to the conservative treatment of the wound by Dr. Middleton. Mrs. Coyle, who has been down with fever, is convalescent.

The Fish Springs school has been awarded to Miss Mabel Chalfant. The pupils of that district are to be congratulated on their good fortune in the premises.

The people of Big Pine and vicinity are canvassing the problem of utilizing the water of the lakes on upper Pine Creek, and initial steps will soon be taken to secure the success of the enterprise.

Miss Christine McDonald who has been sojourning among the webb-footed denizens of "Where Rolls the Oregon," will soon greet the friends of her childhood at the hamlet.

The "wheel-walking" fad has at last struck the hamlet in full force, and the graceful curves of the biclyclist can be witnessed almost any time on the main street.

Uhlmeyer & Callow will soon re-open the Bush mine, southeast of Alvord. This claim may soon join the bullion-producing list.

The Randle brothers are now making an experimental run of ore from the old Jim Turner claim, near Baker Creek.

Two gay young "outers," one from the capital of Inyo and the other from Frisco, have adorned the hamlet at brief intervals lately. The more susceptible one made a laughable mistake at Bishop in a matter in which Cupid usually gets in his work.

There is some talk here of a joint candidate for County Treasurer.

SWAMPER.

Now that Hawaii has beee annexed to the United States, there is talk of making Honolulu a half-way port for the troops on their way to the Phillippines. This is substantially the "military necessity" of the great stride anyway, and a prominent army officer is quoted as saying: "Men can be set down there in a week, and the entire 13,000 still to go might reach there easily within a month from now. They would have unsurpassed sanitary conditions there and every facility for drill. The transports returning from Manila would receive their allotment of troops and freight at Honolulu and would have only two-thirds of the distance to cover between San Francisco and Manilla."

HEALDSBURG'S SCHOOL.

Healdsburg School at Burlingame, Cal., still maintains its position in the front ranks of the schools on the Pacific Coast. It has just closed the most successful year in its history, and graduated ten young men. Nowhere are boys better taught or better cared for in every respect.—S. F. Call, May 29.

SHE WON BEAUTIFULLY.

It Cost Him the Better Part of a Cigar to Learn Politeness.

They boarded an east bound Market street car at Forty-first street. It was after 1 o'clock in the morning, and he wanted to smoke, having probably just dined or supped at a ball which was being given in the neighborhood. She didn't want to smoke and she didn't want to be separated from him.

"Come on inside the car," she pleaded.

"No," he answered. "I am going to smoke. Go inside yourself, and when I have finished my cigar I will join you."

But this didn't suit her.

"If you stay out here to smoke," she retorted, "I'll stay right with you."

He looked at her a moment, and then evidently concluded that she was bluffing. Pulling out a big cigar, he lighted it, and, settling himself comfortably against the dashboard of the car, he began to pull away as if his life depended upon it. Nothing daunted, she took a place alongside of him and calmly folding her arms started up a lively conversation.

The spectacle was an odd one, and attracted the attention of every passenger in the car as well as of those who got on at various corners. He tried to urge her inside the car a number of times, but she refused to go. In this fashion the two rode across the bridge and half way to city hall before he weakened. The anticipated jeers of the people he knew would be on Market street in the center of the city were too much for him, and, throwing away the biggest end of his cigar, he sullenly said, "Well, if you won't go inside without me I suppose I'll have to trot along." Then he took a seat away up in the front end, and she settled herself beside him. Meanwhile the whole car smiled audibly.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

WHAT IT COSTS TO SMOKE.

A Library Which Materialized From Tabooed Five Cent Cigars.

"How can you afford all these books?" asked a young man, calling upon a friend. "I can't seem to find spare change for even the leading magazines."

"Oh, that library is only my 'one cigar a day,'" was the reply.

"What do you mean," inquired the visitor.

"Mean? Just this: When you advised me to indulge in an occasional cigar several years ago, I had been reading about a young fellow who bought books with money that others would have burned in cigars, and I thought I would try to do the same. You may remember that I said I should allow myself one cigar a day?"

"Yes, I recall the conversation, but don't quite see the connection."

"Well, I never smoked, but I put by the price of a 5 cent cigar every day, and as the money accumulated I bought books—the very books you see."

"You don't mean to say that your books cost no more than that! Why, there are dollars' worth of them."

"Yes, I know there are. I had six years more of my apprenticeship to serve when you advised me 'to be a man.' I put by the money, which, at 5 cents a day, amounted to $18.25 a year, or $109.50 in six years. I keep those books by themselves as a result of my apprenticeship cigar money, and if you'd done as I did you would by this time have saved many, many more dollars than I have and would have been better off in health and self respect besides."—Success.

The Alpine Good Night.

Among the lofty mountains and elevated valleys of Switzerland the Alpine horn has another use besides that of sounding the farfamed "Ranz des Vaches," or cow song, and this is of a very solemn and impressive nature.

When the sun has set in the valley and the snowy summits of the mountains gleam with golden light, the herdsman who dwells upon the highest habitable spot takes his horn and pronounces clearly and loudly through it, as through a speaking trumpet, "Praise the Lord God." As soon as the sound is heard by the neighboring herdsmen they issue from their huts, take their Alpine horns and repeat the same words.

This frequently lasts a quarter of an hour, and the call resounds from all the mountains and rocky cliffs around. When silence again reigns, the herdsmen kneel and pray with uncovered heads. Meantime it has become quite dark. "Good night!" at last calls the highest herdsman through his horn. The words resound from all the mountains, the horns of the herdsmen and the cliffs, and the mountaineers then retire to their dwellings.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Thrifty George Curzon.

The Hon. George Curzon, who married beautiful Miss Leiter, is decidedly canny. He recently rented a country mansion furnished, but without the family plate, and so was compelled to provide candlesticks for the house. He tried to exact from the landlord's agent a pledge that at the expiration of the lease he would take these candlesticks off his hands at two-thirds of what they cost. The agent demurred at first, but when he discovered that they were 15 in number, of japanned tin and cost 40 cents each, he solemnly agreed to pay $4 for the lot when Curzon leaves.

Maternal Trials.

"Edie," cried the mother from the hall below, "what's all that noise up stairs? It's shocking."

"Oh, it's these two dolls of mine, mamma. I'm going to put them right to bed and see if we can't have a little peace."—Detroit Free Press.

THE FAMILY STORY

THE CONQUERING HERO.

It was a pretty scene! The trees had the abundance of verdant foliage that belongs to happy June; the grass seemed more than usually rich and green and the wild flowers more abundant than ever before—there was a rural bridge over a deep, rushing stream that fed a mill dam some distance beyond; and roses clambered over the broken rails of the bridge and twined their wild tendrils about an old tree near by, against which was a rustic seat. On the rustic seat was another rose—a very sweet and fresh and lovely rose in white muslin, with a Marie Antoinette fichu across her breast and knotted at the waist, and a wide leghorn hat on her head that shaded her eyes so cleverly that no beholder could guess that tears were rising there from time to time and dropping on the white mull kerchief. And this had happened so often that the rose might very well be said to be washed in dew.

Her name was Kate, and she was very angry with herself because the tears would fall despite all the indignant things she was saying to herself in the effort to stop their flow, till at last she started to her feet in a dreadful pet and began to walk up and down, crushing the wild flowers under her feet. But that could not continue, for she was a very sweet little woman and could not even hurt a flower without regretting it; and presently she bent her graceful figure and pulled the wild anemones and the few late violets, and, having reached the rustic seat, she added a rose or two and sat down.

"It's a perfectly lovely morning!" she murmured, and pinned the flowers among the folds of the mull kerchief. "I wonder where she has taken the child, because——"

She stopped and looked anxiously about till she saw, in the distance, the maid and the little boy rambling among the trees and apparently absorbed in gathering wild flowers and chasing butterflies; and the music of the child's laughter was borne to her on the soft, perfumed summer breeze. It was a heavenly sound—a sound to gladden any mother's heart; but Kate Selden sighed and drew from her belt a closely-crumpled piece of paper, which she had thrust there in fierce impatience; and as she looked at it the tears, which had not retreated very far, again rose to her eyes.

"Oh, I'm just a dreadful fool!" she thought; "a silly, silly little simpleton! And I'm glad he is late, for I wouldn't have him know, for anything in this world, that I cared enough to cry——" And, smoothing out the crumpled paper, she began to read the written words once more, though she already knew them by heart:

"If you will see me on Wednesday we can talk the matter over. I have spoken with my lawyer, and he has consulted with yours, and a separation can be arranged without any public scandal—at least, I hope so. I would call at the house, but I know your mother hates me worse than ever now, and it would only cause a scene. So, if you will come to the old rustic seat close by the bridge—you know where we used to meet in the old, happy days—ah, Kate, if you would only let me tell you everything you would find that I am not so very much to blame—but I won't speak of that. Because, of course, I know you wish to leave me, and I will make no defense. Yes, you shall keep the boy, though I believe the law would give him to me if I chose to fight for my right. But I don't care to call it my right—no, in that I yield to you entirely. I believe a child belongs to his mother first and before all others. Therefore, I give him to you without asking what the law might say about it. But I do ask that you will let me see him as often as I may wish, for I love him, dear—yes, though you may not believe it, Kate, I love him next to his mother, who is still the dearest on earth to me. There, I didn't mean to say that; but it is written, and let it stay so. I will not offend you again; but be there on Wednesday, any time before noon. I won't be later than 11, and we can arrange all the business details—the lawyers will do the rest."

BEGAN TO READ THE WRITTEN WORDS.

And by this time the tears were brimming over, but she wiped them softly away; and, instead of crushing the paper as before, she folded it very smoothly and slipped it inside her corsage, where she could feel it rise and fall beneath the hurried beating of her heart.

"I'm glad he's late," she repeated; "I'm very glad he's late." And then she looked at her watch and found it was not quite 10:30. "O, he isn't late, after all—I must have been very early—I will go and find Annette and the child." And as she rose there was the crackling of a twig under a hasty footstep and Kate Selden stood face to face with her husband. He was very pale, and his lips looked pallid and drawn with the effort to keep from trembling. She had flushed deeply when their eyes met, but now the color ebbed away from her girlish face and she said confusedly:

"I am so glad!—I mean not to keep you waiting. You see I am here first."

"You are very good," he said; "but you are always good. You got my letter?"

"O, yes, or I wouldn't have known you were coming here." She moved backward a step and was very glad to drop into the old rustic seat. "It is very generous of you, Sidney, to agree to everything, and particularly about baby."

"It is all I can do, now—to try and please you," he answered, weakly; and the perspiration was like dew on his

"COURAGE, MA'AM, COURAGE."

brow. He took off his hat and stammered something about its being "awfully hot."

"Yes, perhaps you have walked fast—it is very warm and you look tired. Won't you sit down?" She moved a little further away to make room for him, and he dropped into the place beside her.

"Am I to see baby to-day?" he asked after a few minutes of awkward silence. "I haven't seen him, you know, since——"

"Oh, yes," she answered hurriedly, and, looking about, "there they are, he and Annette, yonder in the woods; they are coming this way; oh, Sidney," she cried, suddenly turning toward him, "how could you? I can never, never forgive you."

"I could never dare to ask you."

They were almost the very words of Pauline and Claude. She remembered in a moment that it had been the first play Sidney had taken her to see after they had married; and how often they had laughed at that pair of lovers, each dying to forgive and be forgiven, and neither daring to say the right word. She used to think she could never be so foolish as that, and now—it was getting very awkward, for this was a far more serious matter, and she knew that she could never, never forgive. What woman could?

And then she heard the laughter and shouts of little Sidney, who had just caught sight of his father and was now running wildly to welcome him. It was a fortunate interruption to a scene that was nearing a painful climax, and she was very glad to take a step or two towards the laughing boy, who was already flying across the bridge, followed by his nurse; then there was a crash, a shriek; the side of the bridge was gaping outward; the maid stood wringing her hands; the golden curls that had floated a moment above the running waters, were gone.

It was so sudden, so inexplicable that the frantic mother could not realize at first what had happened. When she did, the air resounded with her agonized cries, and it was the nurse girl who was the first to see that Sidney had already reached his child just in time.

"Courage, ma'am, courage!" the girl whispered, while she supported her mistress. "See—he is safe! His father has him—look, look! The darling has his arms about the master's neck, an' he's huggin' an' kissing of him just as if nothing had happened at all!"

The girl assisted her mistress back to the little rustic seat, and when the father and child had reached the young mother, little Sidney was already laughing with delight; and as he put one dripping arm about her neck, he drew her close till her face touched her husband's face.

"Kate," whispered Sidney, "Kate, may I beg forgiveness now?"

"O, Sidney! I have been so proud and heartless! I was jealous and vain—and—and—selfish and unfair! I wouldn't listen to you, and all the time I knew you never cared for that woman! Can you forgive me, too?"

"Just give me a chance, that's all," and then two pairs of arms met and clasped each other close about the conquering hero, who seemed to find himself quite suddenly an object of secondary importance.

It then occurred to Annette that Master Sidney would have a dreadful cold unless his dripping garments were changed immediately; so she carried him off in pursuit of dry clothing.—Popular Monthly.

HELD THE FORT.

John Barleycorn Proved Too Much for a Band of Hostile Indians.

An adventure with hostile Indians, seldom surpassed in critical peril and exciting situation, was that of a French-Canadian some years ago at Fort Pierre au Calumet, on Lake Athabasca. One day, when the chief trader was absent on a visit to York factory, and the other men employed in the station were playing lacrosse upon the ice, this man and an Irishman named McTaggart were the only persons left in the fort.

Just then forty Chippewa "braves" who had pretended to have furs to sell, but who had really been watching an opportunity to plunder, came up to the fort and poured inside the stockade. Pierre, the Frenchman, had barely time to bar the main door when they rushed against it, showing plainly their unfriendly purpose. A parley with the chief, through a small side-trap, resulted in the withdrawal of the Indians outside the stockade and an agreement to admit the chief alone, with the furs. Pierre thus relates what followed:

I instructed my man, McTaggart, to watch when the Indians were well out of the yard, and when the chief came in to make a dash and fasten the outer gate. I then opened the door. McTaggart slipped out, but had not made one step when the chief struck him with his tomahawk, killing him instantly. The savage then darted through the half-open door, and, parrying a blow I aimed at him, he seized the bar which fastened the door and threw it outside.

I had by this time got hold of one of my pistols and pulled it at him as he came toward me, flourishing his bloody tomahawk. The bullet took effect, for the savage, with a frightful yell, staggered through the doorway, where his cries soon gathered his band about him.

Before I could fasten the door the whole gang had burst into the fort. I sprang behind some casks and hid myself there, feeling, however, sure that they would find and kill me. There can be no doubt about my fate if the savages had not been more eager for plunder and whisky than they were for vengeance.

As it was, one of them at once rushed to a cask of whisky, the head of which he stove in with his hatchet, and with the greatest eagerness the whole crowd began to help themselves to the contents.

That they would drink themselves drunk was now my only hope and opportunity, and I quietly kept out of sight behind the empty barrels to await events.

The idiotic abandon and general "cutting up" of the savages as they came under the influence of the whisky was very ludicrous; but you may be sure I kept my laughter to myself. In an hour all were hopelessly intoxicated, except one big fellow who seemed to have a stronger head than the rest.

I now felt that with my pistol in my hand I could fight at least on equal terms, if a fight was necessary; but the rascal precipitated matters by turning over the cask of whisky while climbing to reach some plunder that he wanted on an upper shelf. In doing this a live coal was jarred out of the stove into the liquor on the floor and the room was immediately in flames. The Indian who had caused the catastrophe sprang toward the door, but my pistol ended his career.

The whisky was soon consumed, as there was but little left, and the fire was put out without doing large damage, but many of the drunken savages on the floor were fatally burned. When the men came back from the lake and found so many dead Indians and saw the general ruin they were amazed, and supposed I deserved all the credit of the capture of the assailants, etc., when it was merely an accident that had accomplished it.

A Peter the Great "Boom."

We are about to witness the outbreak of a boom on Peter the Great similar to that which has raged for some years round the person of Napoleon. Sir Henry Irving, with all the world open to him, has chosen a play on Peter the Great, written by his son. Prof. Oscar Browning is about to publish a life of the inevitable Peter; and J. M. Graham's historical novel, "The Son of the Czar," has already attracted considerable attention, and will certainly be widely read, as it gives a powerful presentation of Russian life at the most critical epoch of Muscovite history. There is something significant in this renaissance of Peter the Great. The smaller states of Europe are vanishing, one by one, and everything points to eventual collision between the Teuton and the Slav. In the meantime everything that Holy Russia and the anointed person of the Kaiser can do to magnify their respective missions will certainly be accomplished.—Harper's Weekly.

An Original Order.

An order came to a wholesale hardware house one day last week.

That is, it was presumably an order, for it was written under a business heading and had all the general appearances.

The employe who opened the letter studied it and said it beat anything he had seen up to date.

He sent it to a member of the firm, who read it and threw up both hands.

Since then he has been showing it to his friends. It was written by a rural dealer, and is as follows:

"Gentlemen—Please send me at once two long-handled shovels, one dozen sixteen-inch hinges and two kegs of tenpenny nails. Yours truly,

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Power of Woman.—Many a hand is relaxed at the entreaty of woman, which no other power on earth could undo.—Rev. J. H. Rylance, Episcopalian, New York City.

God in History.—God is in history as well as in nature, and America's grand commission is to provide for the liberty of God's people.—Rev. David Gregg, Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

New Religion.—We do not need a new religion as much as we do an application of the principles of the old to every strata of the social, business and political world.—Rev. T. E. Cramblet, Christian, Pittsburg, Pa.

Sin.—Sin has two effects on the soul. It disorders the soul itself and it estranges it from God. Vitally these effects are one and identical. The two remedies are one in effect also.—Rev. Lyman Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Business and Religion.—The religious problems of to-day are not commonly understood, and those who think that these problems can be thought out while one is sawing wood or counting money are wrong.—Rev. J. E. Cathell, Episcopalian, Des Moines, Iowa.

The Sunday School. There is need, not of a new institution to take the place of the Sabbath school, but of a complete overhauling and renovation of the whole institution.—Rev. J. C. Wylie, Presbyterian, Williamsburg, Pa.

Our Westminster.—The history of our nation is not found in the cash drawers of its merchants, but in the graves of its heroic dead. Our Westminster Abbey is at Vicksburg and Gettysburg.—Rev H. MacAyeal, Congregationalist, Omaha, Neb.

On the Sea.—The sea is the Lord's battle ground. He has defeated powerful fleets and mighty nations by the sea. Bloody and cruel Spain has been taught many a lesson by the great owner of the sea.—Rev. N. Woodside, Methodist, Allegheny, Pa.

Spain.—The nation that, in the days of her greatness, would hire the assassin to kill such a man as William the Prince of Orange would be none too good to place a mine under the Maine in the days of her weakness.—Rev. J. R. Henry, Presbyterian, Shadyside, Pa.

Thoughts.—"The heart of man is evil above all things and desperately wicked." Evil thoughts may be driven from the mind, but if the place is not filled with good thoughts the old tenants are sure to return much stronger than ever.—Rev. Florence Buck, Unitarian, Cleveland, Ohio.

War.—War is a grim and dreadful thing, but there are crises in the lives of nations in which war has all the elements of nobility and righteousness. There are times when war is to be sought as the divinest and most God-given agency.—Rev. S. W. McCorkle, Methodist, Pittsburg, Pa.

Weylers.—Our saloons are the Weylers of our city. These convert women and children into reconcentrados. Their homes are destroyed, their education neglected, their wives and children are starved and their fair name goes down to posterity with the shame of a drunkard's child.—Rev. C. L. Thurgood, Disciple, Pittsburg, Pa.

Ridicule.—When we think of becoming Christians, we are so afraid that somebody will laugh at us, so afraid of what people will say. But a laugh or a sneer cannot injure; public opinion cannot hurt anyone for doing right.—Rev. H. H. Barbour, Baptist, Columbus, Ohio.

Peace of Soul.—Sin, the destroyer of our peace, is nailed to the cross with Jesus, so that it need have no dominion over us. Peace meets the deepest longings of a man's soul. Pleasure is man's delight, but peace is his necessity. No man is at his best without it.—Rev. G. Roughton, Methodist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Women of God.—Since the family is the unit of society, and upon the family is based the church and state, it follows that the purity of society, the piety of the church and the patriotism of the state will not rise higher than the purity, piety and patriotism of woman in her sphere as wife and mother. The women whom God made, not the new women, are those who rule the world.—Rev. W. A. Stanton, Presbyterian, Pittsburg, Pa.

The Boy Musician.

He laid the bow across the strings
Gently; he loved them, it would seem.
A dream was in his face—and then
The violin began to dream.

"When skies are gray, are gray," it sang,
"When keen and cold the night wind thrills,
Then the dark world is big with hope,
For morning waits behind the hills.

"If life is sad, is sad," it sang,
"What then?—the saddest things are sweet;
Life, love and death—our heritage—
In them all pain and gladness meet.

"And round this dark, bright world," it sang,
"The winds of God blow all the time,
Calling the soul to farther heights—
Pause not, for thou hast strength to climb."

He laid the bow across the strings,
And sweet and clear the music rang.
He was the dream's interpreter,
And yet he knew not what he sang.

THE STAGE DRIVER'S BLUFF.

Hairbreadth Stories of Accidents Which Failed to Awe One Passenger.

As we left Sandy Gulch for Rising Sun there were six male passengers to go by the stage, and the route was over the mountains and full of chances of disaster. The driver came out from breakfast as soon as the stage was ready, and looking about on the passengers he selected a small, pale faced man and invited him to climb up beside him. While the pale faced man was climbing the driver whispered to the rest of us:

"I picked him out in order to scare him to death. You fellows will see a heap of fun before we've gone ten miles."

Two minutes west of the gulch the road made a sudden turn, with a sheer fall of 100 feet down to Wild Cat creek, and the driver put his horses at the gallop and said to the man:

"We may get around all right, or we may fetch up down below. Hold your breath and say your prayers."

The passenger made no move and did not change countenance, and after making the course all right the driver rather indignantly demanded:

"Didn't you see that the off wheel run within a foot of the edge of the precipice?"

"It ran within six inches, sir," was the reply.

Beyond the curve was a down grade of a mile, and with a yell and a flourish of his whip the driver urged his horses to a dead run. The five of us inside had to hang on for dear life, and every half minute the stage seemed bound to go over.

"Did you know that if we'd struck a rock we'd all been dead men in no time?"

"Of course."

"And you wasn't prayin?"

"Not at all."

Three or four miles farther on the driver tried his man with another curve. In his determination to make a close call of it one wheel ran off the edge of the precipice, and only a sudden effort of the horses saved the coach. We were flung in a heap and frightened half to death, but the man beside the driver never lost a puff of his cigar. When things were safe, the driver turned on him with:

"That surely was the brink of the grave."

"Guess it was," was the quiet reply.

"The closest shave you will ever hev till the last one comes."

"Yes."

"See here, now, but what sort of a critter are you?" was the query. "Don't you know 'nuff to git skeart?"

"Nothing has happened yet to scare me."

"But mebbe you want me to drive plumb over a precipice 1,000 feet high?"

"If you conveniently can. The fact is, I came off up here intending to commit suicide, and if you can dump the whole of us over some cliff you'll oblige me."—Atlanta Constitution.

TO WOMEN FROM

Mrs. Joseph Peterson, Warren, Pa.

"I have suffered with womb trouble over fifteen years. I had inflammation, enlargement, and displacement of the womb.

"The doctor wanted me to take treatments, but I had just begun taking Mrs. Pinkham's Compound, and my husband said I had better wait and see how much good that would do me. I was so sick when I began with her medicine, I could hardly be on my feet. I had the backache constantly, also headache, and was so dizzy. I could not walk around, and I could not lie down, for then my heart would beat so fast I would feel as though I was smothering. I had to sit up in bed nights in order to breathe. I was so weak I could not do anything. I have now taken several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and used three packages of Sanative Wash, and can say I am perfectly cured. I do not think I could have lived long if Mrs. Pinkham's medicine had not helped me."

HIS MOTHER HIS SWEETHEART.

"His mother's his sweetheart—the sweetest, the best!"
So say the white roses he brings to my breast;
The roses that bloom when life's summers depart;
But his love is the sweetest rose over my heart!
The love that hath crowned me—
A necklace around me,
That closer to God and to heaven hath bound me!

"His mother's his sweetheart!" Through all the sad years
His love is the rainbow that shines through my tears;
My light in God's darkness, when with my dim eyes
I see not the stars in the storm of his skies.
When I bow 'neath the rod
And no rose decks the sod,
His love lights the pathway that leads me to God!

"His mother's his sweetheart." Shine bright for his feet,
O lamps on life's highway! and roses, lean sweet
To the lips of my darling! and God grant his sun
And his stars to my dutiful, beautiful one!
For his love—it hath crowned me—
A necklace around me,
And closer to God and to heaven hath bound me!

A DESERTER'S RETURN.

SHE stood in the doorway of the shack and watched him trailing down the road after the horses in a cloud of dust. When he had passed over the rise and the jingle of harness came no longer to her ears she sat down upon the doorstep with a troubled sigh. The shanty, almost the one brown spot in the rumbling wilderness of grass, was small and dingy and redolent of the tar paper that covered its sides. From its one tile chimney there faltered a thin column of smoke that struggled weakly for a moment and then sank to the ground, bringing in its midst a shower of soot that touched here and there with grimy fingers. Over the white-curtained window ran a vine, twining about the decaying sash in a luxuriant profusion of foliage, heavy with budded promise. One sprig, bolder than the rest, stretched its length of tender green across to the door, and hung far down, swinging in the wind and holding out its curling tendrils, like tiny fingers, in wistful greeting to the woman below. A row of lusty sunflowers ran from the house to the straw-thatched barn, holding up their rotund faces for a kiss from the sun and forgetting entirely the timid devotion of the morning glories that wound about their sturdy limbs and climbed high up to offer to their unbending masters a taste of morning dew from their horns of scarlet and gold. A hen, fussy with the responsibilities of an overlarge family, basked in the warm earth and clucked unheeded warnings to her downy brood.

The woman took off her hat and laid it beside her. The breeze, fresh with the smell of ripening wheat, blew onto her cheek and lingered to coax a stray ringlet into her eyes. A gray squirrel that had run from his burrow to snatch a few crumbs paused to note her disconsolate attitude and perked his head in inquisitive wonder. A little way fro mthe house the railroad crossed the farm in a long stretch of yellow clay. Sometimes Annette had sat on the ties and looked longingly into the glimmering distance from whence she had come and wished that she could go back, and then grew afraid of herself that she could make such a wish. She remembered now, how, from the flying train she had looked out upon a cluster of buildings huddled close together for warmth, it seemed, and casually wondered how a person could live in such a place, and afterwards, when she found it was to be her home and Jack's, she felt with a sudden sinking of the heart how dreary her life must become. Even then, strong with the fervor of love, she had somehow realized the hopelessness of the undertaking, and now that the roseate flush of the honeymoon had faded she sat up with a dull pain in her head and a wave of homesickness rolled over her.

Annette was, in truth, a child of civilization. She loved the noise and bustle of the city, the rattle of trucks, the rumble of cabs, the clanging of cable-car gongs, the purr of the trolley; she loved the cries of the street, the hurry of footsteps, the shrieking of locomotives, the sounding of whistles; and this morning she thirsted with heart-sick eagerness for the sight of home, the crowded thoroughfares, the brightly-green patches of lawn, the smooth stretches of boulevard, the mottled shadow of the sun shining through the leaves, the glare of night illumination on shiny wet pavements. She longed for the shop windows, the tall buildings and the smoke-canopled sky of her native city; for a sight of the familiar office, the clicking typewriters, the patter of the ticker as it thrust forth its long tongue of dotted paper; her cushioned seat by the window, from which she could look out on sanded roofs and black-throated chimneys, and where voices of the pigmy street multitudes came up to her in a murmuring babel of tongues. All this she had left for the love of him—and she did love her husband.

But her world, how empty it was, how lonesome and still, how utterly forsaken she had grown to feel in spite of him. When she had first come the novelty had charmed her. The air was deliciously soft and the grass in its first greenness above the sod. Patches of snow still lingered on the shadow side of the swales; in the sunny places the crocuses sprang up and bloomed. But now the grass was tall and the wind swept through it in grewsome whispers that made her think of a country graveyard. And every tall bearded stalk had answered with a nod of its head and seemed to look askance at her with knowing smile; the grasshoppers perched in the shade and tzig-tzigged in monotonous cadence, the gophers chattered impudently and the plovers whistled from above, and with one accord they seemed derisively to say, "Homesick, homesick—a bride and homesick." And so she was—miseraly, unbearably so, and every one appeared to know it save Jack.

Poor, busy Jack! It was all work with him and no sympathy. In the morning he hurried to the fields, he hurried from the table, at night he hurried to bed that he might be the early riser that the next day's labors demanded. Thus it was, perhaps, that he did not notice the shadows that deepened in her eyes. At first, with a little encouragement, she would have told him all and cried it out on his shoulder, and, perhaps, together they might have learned the lesson of endurance. But now her heart had crusted over and hid beneath its surface her sorrow. Suffering, doubt, grew in noxious luxuriance in her soul's garden and threatened to choke out timid love. For this she blamed him. She said, over and over to herself, that he did not care, and then, out of loyalty to him, denied it, but at last, against her will, she had admitted the truth of the accusation.

Finally she had told it to the dog and wept into his shaggy mane, and he had listened gravely and with infinite patience, and licked her hand in fond sympathy. But of late it seemed to her that he had deserted her cause, and, as if to reprove her discontent and set an example of fidelity, left her side to follow his master all the day long. And it had come to this! She would answer the pleadings of her soul; she would leave him. She would go home, back to noise and bustle and life; back to friends and voiceful companionship. Strengthened with sudden resolution, she sprang to her feet and looked at the clock. There was time to catch the down train. She had money of her own, the remains of her spinster savings. She would take the pony and leave at the postoffice a note that would explain the story of it all to Jack. With nervous fingers she set about tidying the room. When this task was finished she placed upon the table Jack's luncheon, noting with a tender smile some of the things she had brought with her and which she was about to leave—the dainty tea urn, the sugar and cream holders that Jack had laughed at for their smallness, the cup with a broken handle that was reserved for him because of its size and solidity. When the table was set she covered it with a pink net, and turned to lay out her pretty traveling dress that she had worn but once before.

The train pulled in with a rattle and clang of brakes and she climbed aboard and saw the house fade out of sight behind her. Presently, with a shock of recollection, she sat up and pressed her face to the pane. The train was passing through their farm. The low, sod barn, the house with blinds pulled down, and Prince, the dog, running after the train and finally ceasing, satisfied with having chased it off the premises. At last there was Jack in the hayfield; he waved his hat gayly and the horses looked backward over their shoulders at their flying rival. With a frightened gasp Annette shrank into the cushions. A flood of sickening anguish engulfed her. For the first time the full realization that she was forsaking her husband crowded upon her. She forgot the dreariness of the prairie, the emptiness of its landscape, the acres of solitude; she forgot her desolation and suffering. The vision of the empty home smote her. The words of Jack's last good-by sounded in her ears; the presence of his kiss was upon her lips.

She slowly straightened herself in her seat and brushed her face as if to drive away the sight of it. Then a new look came into her eyes; a holy fire suffused her countenance, such as might have shone in the eyes of the Christian maiden and blotted out fear of the beast.

Yes, she would return! It was not too late. She could take the next train back, and intercept that cruel note. He should never read it—should never know.

The sun was sinking low into the western horizon when she came again to the town, and its golden light glorified the tall, red-turreted elevators and softened the outlines of the gaunt frame buildings until they looked no longer hateful to her. She hastened across the sandy road to the postoffice with almost a light heart.

"You sent the letter out to my husband?" she cried sharply.

A numbing fear took possession of her. It was, then, after all, too late. Already he had read the lines, and knew of her unwifely intentions. Could he ever love her—now? And in her desolation the need of his love, above all things, grew apparent.

However, it should make no change in her resolve. Duty still pointed out the road. Wearily, regretfully must she take up the dropped stitch of life; perhaps, sometime, she could live it down.

The misery of the homeward ride she can never forget. She shut her teeth in firm resolve and clung desperately to the pony, while he flew over the road; all the while the dull thuds of his footsteps sounded in her ears like coffin clods.

She seemed to see in her mind's eye Jack's surprised greeting, his calm, cold, cutting words, than which she would rather face death, she sobbed, weakly, over and over.

Then, from the crest of the rise, the house came in view. The picketed horses came trotting toward her to the length of their ropes, with many an arch of the back and friendly neigh of recognition for their comrade. Prince came running down the road, frantic with welcome, and Jack came to the door with a skillet in his hand.

"Supper is ready," he cried gayly, coming to lift her tenderly from the saddle.

What—what, she cried to herself, dizzily, could it be he had never received the letter. Then she fainted in his arms.

When she revived she clung to him and looked earnestly in his eyes; hope leaped in her bosom. There was no cloud on his brow; he did not know.

When the dishes were cleared away they took their chairs into the front yard. The moon was rising in sleepy-eyed splendor.

"I have something to tell you," he said, drawing close to her. "Good news," he added hastily, alarmed by the look on her face. "I sold the farm to-day. The Illinois man bought it, paid every dollar in cash, and I have it here, and, best of all, the letter that came this afternoon"—she caught her breath—"was from the Journal. Briggs says I can have my old place again, and for me to come at once."

He silenced her with a wave of his hand. "I knew," he continued, "that you were dissatisfied; I saw it all along, and it nearly killed me. I blamed myself for bringing you to such a place, and—but—wait till I get my pipe——"

A moment later she heard him knocking about in the house. Then she noticed Prince digging in the dirt and caught the flutter of something white.

"Bring it here, sir!" she cried, sternly.

When he had brought it, with reluctant step and downcast demeanor, she saw it to be a letter—her own letter to Jack—the hateful letter, crumpled and earth-stained, but—unopened. With a cry of joy she seized the dog in her arms and kissed his earthy nose. She ceased her demonstrations a moment to answer Jack's voice from the doorway.

"Oh, in that package!" she replied. "Why, cigars. I bought them for you to-day—the biggest ones I could find."

"Um, um," said Jack, sniffing at them suspiciously; "they are nice. I will save them for Sunday."

When he had lighted his pipe and taken a few satisfied puffs, he remarked: "Copley said he left two letters for me under the door, but I could find only one. I suppose the wind blew it away."

Annette said nothing, but stroked Prince, and he thumped his tail on the ground and looked fondly, first at one, then at the other.—Indiana State Journal.

Hair Turns White from Fright.

Dr. Parry, in the Dublin Medical Press (1861), gives the following instance of hair turning white from fright. On Feb. 19, 1859, the command of General Franks, operating in the southern part of the kingdom of Oude, had an engagement with a body of rebels. Several of the enemy were taken prisoners. One of them, a Sepoy, was led before the authorities to be questioned. "I then had occasion," said Parry, "to observe in this man the events that I propose to relate. The prisoner for the first time seemed to be conscious of his danger when, deprived of his uniform and completely nude, he saw himself surrounded by soldiers. He then began to tremble violently, terror and despair were depicted on his face, and, though he responded to the questions addressed to him, he seemed actually stupefied by fear. Then, under our very eyes and in the space of scarcely half an hour, his hair, which we had seen was a brilliant black, turned gray uniformly over the whole head."

There is nothing so terrible about the sign "Keep Off the Grass." If a man has a nice lawn, he has a right to order the loafers off.

HOW THE AMERICAN AND BRITISH SOLDIERS ONCE BRAVELY STORMED AND TOOK THE FAMOUS MORRO CASTLE.

FILLING little space in the histories of England and Spain because of the magnitude of the interests involved elsewhere, almost forgotten by America in spite of the bearing of all its contemporary incidents upon the present war in Cuba, the taking of Havana by the British and Colonial troops in 1762 remains an almost unexploited episode in the annals of nations. Yet it was an event of the first importance in its own day and contains lessons of the first moment. It shows that English-speaking troops can take the field with success against double their number of Spaniards, fuly provisioned and strongly entrenched. The utter incapacity for straightforward, pertinacious fighting which both Napoleon and the Duke of Wellington found in the Spanish army during the peninsular war was as conspicuous fifty years before, and may rightly be argued as perpetually inherent in the national character; for, though the annals of Spain are filled with instances of individual courage of the first rank, demoralization sets in as soon as they come together in numbers, their chief maneuver in the course of a century and a half being plain running away. Yet the fight made by the Spaniards in Havana during the attack of the British and colonial forces in 1762 is the one notable instance of a prolonged struggle between men who speak English and men who speak Spanish. History may be searched in vain, either in the old or new world, for a defense as able in point of generalship or as stubborn in resistance.

THE STRATEGY BOARD.

Ex-Fighting Men Who Direct the Movements of Ships.

Admirals Dewey and Sampson, with Commodores Schley and Watson, do the fighting, but there are four men in Washington who tell them what they shall do and when. These are the members of the Board of Strategy, who have charge of the conduct of the war on sea, and so far as possible direct the battles, leaving only the details to the fleet commanders. Each man on the board has seen a good deal of real service and can fight as well as any man in the navy. Aside from this they are well skilled in the science of war and are able to plan battles with almost mathematical certainty. The members of the board are Rear Admiral Montgomery Sicard, Captains A. T. Mahan, A. S. Crowninshield and A. S. Barker, all experts.

Rear Admiral Sicard was born in 1836, graduated from the Naval Academy in 1861 and was a first lieutenant during the war. He fought in the West, at Forts Jackson and St. Philip and Vicksburg. Like Dewey, he was at Fort Fisher. Since the war he has had charge of important stations, the last being the command of the North Atlantic Squadron at Key West, from which he was released in April owing to ill health, Sampson being placed in command. Capt. Mahan saw service during one year of the civil war. He is an expert in naval affairs and has always held important land positions. Capt. Crowninshield is a native of New York, and graduated from the Naval Academy in 1863, his first service being on the steam sloop Ticonderoga with the North Atlantic blockading squadron. He participated in both attacks on Fort Fisher. He reached his present grade of captain in 1894 and preceded Capt. Sigsbee in the command of the Maine. He has lately been a member of the Naval Advisory Board. Capt. Barker was at the Naval Academy when the war broke out, but was ordered into active service on the frigate Mississippi and took part in the capture of New Orleans and the fight at Port Hudson, when the Mississippi was lost. He commanded the Enterprise in 1883-86, when a line of deep sea soundings was run across the Atlantic and Indian Oceans and from New Zealand to the Straits of Magellan. He was the first man in America to use guns loaded with dynamite.

Military Justice.

Old Judge Dole, an early settler of Pike, in the county of Wyoming, New York, was a military man in his early days, having, to quote his own words, "fit the Britishers" in the war of 1812. And he carried his habits of military discipline into the management of his farm.

One hot summer day his hired men, five or six in number, decided to take a nap after their luncheon of doughnuts and pie, instead of setting to work again at haymaking. They selected one of their number to act as sentinel and keep watch for the old judge, and the rest of them stretched themselves at full length in the shade of a big tree.

Unfortunately, or fortunately, the sentinel also yielded to the desire for slumber, and at the end of ten minutes was fast asleep at his post.

Just five minutes later the judge appeared, to see how the work was going on, and he saw at once the state of affairs. From the sentinel's position the judge knew what duty the man had been expected to perform, and without waiting for any explanation, he proceeded to administer a sound drubbing with his stick.

When he had sufficiently admonished the sentinel, the old judge let him go saying, "There, I guess that'll learn you not to sleep on your post!" And without taking the least notice of the other sleepers, the disciplinarian marched off, perfectly satisfied.

UNIFORMS IN AFRICA.

The Natives Show a Love of Soldiers' Cast-off Garments.

"In the course of my travels in South Africa I have been greatly struck by the fondness of the natives for gaudy apparel, particularly uniforms. These are the cast-off uniforms of the various regiments that have been stationed in the country from time to time. Here at Durban one can see every day scores of natives dressed in most ludicrous fashion, partially clothed in military apparel, the coats usually having all the buttons, stripes, and the like complete. You will see a ragged, unkempt Kaffir leading a team of oxen, wearing a much soiled scarlet tunic, or a dark blue tunic with tattered yellow braid or gold lace, and woefully dirty; or else a stable jacket out at elbows, with the yellow braid or gold wire "lines" probably round his waist—no shoes, stockings or head-gear, and merely a cloth round his loins, or, at least, a ragged pair of breeches.

"The coolies, who are employed here so largely, are just as great offenders. All about the place one sees shops with large quantities of uniforms displayed for sale. It is not very long ago that the authorities at home woke up to the fact that it was derogatory to the dignity of the cloth to allow sandwich men and others to wear cast-off uniforms, and thus degrade the soldiers' garb. It was bad enough, in all conscience, to see the loafers in England wearing uniforms, but far worse is it to see dirty niggers and loafing Indians strutting about the streets partially dressed in our gallant soldiers' clothes. It is an insult to the whole British army, and a strong representation should be made to the colony that the wearing of military uniforms by civilians should be discontinued, and made a punishable offense, as in England."—Correspondence of the London Graphic.

Dinah Might.

The Syracuse Post says that a girl baby was recently brought to a clergyman of the city to be baptized. The latter asked the name of the baby:

"Dinah M.," the father responded.

"But what does the 'M.' stand for?" interrogated the minister.

"Well, I do not know yet; it all depends upon how she turns out."

"How she turns out? Why, I do not understand you," said the dominie.

"Oh, if she turns out nice and sweet and handy about the house, like her mother, I shall call her Dinah May. But if she has a fiery temper and displays a bombshell disposition, like mine, I shall call her Dinah Might."

Making-up Horses.

Ladies have not got the art of making-up all to themselves. The silvery-hued mane, tail and forelock which contrast so beautifully with the coats of dark colored horses are produced by the use of peroxide of hydrogen. It is stated that a well-known fashionable New York job master gets in a five-gallon jar of peroxide of hydrogen every week.

CAPTAIN WILDES' COOLNESS.

Ordered Coffee While on the Fighting Bridge at Manila.

If you want to say that any man is always cool, calm and collected, say that he is as cool as Captain Wildes of the cruiser Boston. He is one of the officers with Dewey's fleet at Manila, and all the world is wondering at his calmness. While the Boston slowly steamed into the bay of Manila, while two opposing storms of projectiles swept the waters, while a man could not hear himself think in the thunder of the guns, Wildes stood on the Boston's bridge watching, when the smoke raised, the deadly accuracy of his gunners. Wildes was as cool as a cucumber, but the weather was warm. So he called for a big palm leaf fan, and, calm as a woman at the opera, fanned himself.

So cool and calm was this Yankee fighter while the Spanish ships were sinking under the hail of iron that he remembered he had not had his breakfast. It speaks well for Wildes that, under the circumstances, he bethought himself he was hungry. If a man has a good appetite he is in good health, and if he's healthy he can fight. Feeling the cravings of his appetite, Wildes ordered a cup of coffee to be served to him on the bridge. One can easily imagine he hears Wildes 'order, punctuated by orders, thus:

"I'd thank you for a cup of coffee—Lieutenant, you've got the correct range—and not too much sugar. Another smash like that and the Castella's a goner."

This is probably the first cup of coffee ever served and consumed on a fighting bridge during battle. "Cafe a la Wildes" will be a popular drink in Uncle Sam's navy.

But Wildes was not the only hungry man in that fleet during the first part of the magnificent fight. Dewey was hungry, and being kind and thoughtful, he remembered that all his men and all his officers must be hungry, too. So when breakfast time came Dewey drew off his fleet, and every Yankee on the fleet enjoyed his breakfast very much indeed. Having finished breakfast, they went back and finished the Spaniards.

HABITS OF THE FUR SEAL.

Sea Animal That Has Many of the Traits of Sheep.

The fur seal is a land animal, of perverted tastes, who, living at sea, has had his paws changed into flippers very like the long black kid gloves of a woman. His heart, liver, and kidneys are exactly the same as those of a sheep, and just as good to eat, but his flesh, although just like fat mutton to look at, is rank and distasteful from his habit of eating fish. The whole package is put up in a parcel of thick white fat to keep the body warm, while from the skin grows a heavy crop of beautiful brown fur, protected with large flat oil-bearing hairs, making a glossy surface which slides through the water without friction. Perfectly fearless, overflowing with fun, a perfect little athlete, marvelously strong, the fur seal is the most delightful of all wild creatures. But although they live at sea the seals, being heavily clothed in fat, skin, fur, and hair, find the temperate latitudes much too warm for comfort during the summer months. Since they cannot shed their garments like ourselves, they migrate to a subarctic climate, gathering in immense multitudes where there are fisheries to support them. Their ration is fifty pounds of cod every day, which for a creature the size of a sheep is considerable.

When the little pups appear their mothers go a-fishing to feed them, and likewise teach them to swim. The pups howl with fright when first thrown into the water. Cheating the Government.

Sir Francis Cook, who married Tennessee Claflin, is reported to have just divided $10,000,000 between his two sons in order to cheat the chancellor of the exchequer out of the succession duty which would have to be paid if the money were left as an ordinary legacy. British millionaires have never forgiven Lord Harcourt for increasing those duties to a point which made them an important source of public revenue. Several of them, and among the number the Duke of Westminster, have already divided the bulk of their personal estate among their sons and daughters. Sir Francis Cook is reputed to be worth $20,000,000 even after endowing his sons.

Artesian wells have proved successful in New South Wales, the area within which underground water is found extending over 62,000 square miles.

Frozen Butterflies.

Mountain climbers frequently find butterflies frozen on the snow and so brittle that they break unless carefully handled. When thawed the butterflies recover and fly away.

FRIDAY, JULY 29 1898

CENTRAL COMMITTEE MEETING.

A meeting of the Democratic County Central Committee was held at Independence last Friday enening, and was well attended. It was decided to hold the Democratic Primaries in the various precincts on September 10th, and the County Convention at Big Pine on September 20th. White Smith, P. H. Mack, A. W. Eibeshutz and Irv. H. Mulholland were appointed delegates to the State Convention, also the joint Congressional and State Senatorial Conventions. The voting test adopted is very broad and permits all the frieads of silver to have an equal voice in the selection of county officers, and places the silver issue paramount to all others. The only way to win the silver fight is by a thorough organization and consolidation of all the silver forces. The election of 1896 was a complete breaking down of old party lines. The gold Democrats broke completely away from their former party affiliations. The fact is, that it is an error to call them Democrats. A gold-Democrat is a misnomer—an impossibility. The majority of the Democratic party, in regular National Convention assembled, declared unequivocally for the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold at the ratio of 16 to 1, unassisted by any foreign country. That is now the main issue and principle of the Democratic party. All who had previously been Republicans, and favored the silver cause, voted for William J. Bryan, because he represented their principles. The supporters of the gold standard voted in the main for William McKinley, for the same reason. It is a curious thing the power a mere name possesses. The mere aggregation of certain letters of the alphabet, in a certain way. Take it as a general rule men are "Democrats" or "Republicans" because their fathers or brothers are, not from any actual study of the situatfon. A young man starts in life a "Democrat" or "Republican" and espouses, with youthful ardor, all the quarrels and strifes of "party." He is taught to look with suspicion upon all the utterances or acts of the opposing party. He becomes thoroughly imbued with the idea that he must "beat the other fellow," and party becomes a matter of personal jealousy, petty strife and a determination not to let the other side "get the best of him." That is the reason why in 1896 there were "Gold Democrats" and "Silver Republicans." The men who had been Democrats and who favored the gold standard were not sufficiently broad-minded to come square and call themselves Republicans, as they actually were, and the same of "Silver Republicans." They actually "Democrats," but the old name was over them, coupled with inherent determination not to let the other fellow. It takes the type of moral courage for a man to say that he is in error. Only the broad-minded and generous can do this. In this case there is not even error to err. The "gold Democrats"—save the mark—were gold men at all times, and the "silver Republicans" were men at all times. Every man voted for McKinley is a Republican and every man who voted for Bryan is a Democrat. It is a satisfaction that a man is thinking that only a strong party politics, as well as in the silver fight, the Democratic party gives all equal voice in the selection of officers, and a leader fight all along practically removed from that two questions which have been under discussion. It has proved, first, that there must be a ship canal across the isthmus, connecting by water ways the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. And it has determined that the United States alone must control such canal. Heretofore the need of such canal has rested upon commercial considerations altogether. The convenience of trade, of transportation, has been the end sought to be gained by the several schemes set on foot for this enterprise. To-day, in the light of recent events, commercial considerations are overshadowed by the manifest requirements of national protection. The facts of the advantage to trade flowing from such a water way between the oceans remain the same, but the absolute necessity in case of war presents itself as imperative. The isthmian canal appears in an entirely different relation to our national needs, now that we find ourselves engaged in a war with a foreign power.

For five years Congressman Maguire has made an able fight against the proposition of Collis P. Huntington to extend the time within which to pay the debts due the Government from the Central Pacific Railroad. The railroad has won at last, as Congress, by a clause attached to the general deficiency bill, authorized the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury to make a settlement with the Central Pacific, said settlement to be finally approved by the President. An amendment was adopted providing that unless a settlement was reached within a year then the President is directed to bring foreclosure proceedings to collect all money due the Government. Nobody supposes for a moment that Huntington ever intends to pay a cent of the fifty odd million given his corporation by the Government, and judging from the administration's acts in the San Pedro harbor matter he won't have to.

Something over $200,000 will be paid by this government as "head money" to the officers and sailors who destroyed Cervera's fleet. This is according to the law which provides payment of $100 a head for every man on the ships of the enemy when those ships are destroyed. A few of the officers will receive good fortunes. The law governing the distribution of this money is very explicit. Every man according to his rank will be paid in due season.

The State of Nevada, with a population of less than 45,000, has furnished the United States with 584 men for the volunteer army to fight the Spaniards. This is proportionately a larger number of troops than has enrolled in the volunteer service from any State in the Union. The boys left business behind and want a chance to fight.

The fact that it is costing the United States $1,000,000 a day to carry on the war should cause Spain a good deal more apprehension about the future than the people of this county have reason to feel—that is, if all the old Spanish possessions are worth that much.

One good result of the present war will be the splendid reputations American ship-builders have gained in Europe. The Pacific Coast will gain thereby more than Eastern builders, as the ships built in San Francisco have all made excellent records.

In spite of the war railroad building in the United States for the year will be equal to if not greater than that of the last three years. A very large proportion of this new mileage has been built for supplying feeders to roads now in operation.

Placer mining on the other side of the hills is almost at a standstill, owing to the scarcity of water, a condition that never before prevailed in California at this season.

Following were the average prices of metals quoted in New York for the month of June: Copper, 11 89 cents; lead, 3 82 cents per lb.; silver, 58 61 cents per troy ounce; quicksilver, $43 per flask.

Powder mill owners give as a reason for employing Chinese the fact that white men refuse to work because of the great danger. It is estimated that about 20 per cent of the Chinese lose their lives.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JULY 29..... 1898

J. W. Murphy starts for Randsburg to-day.

Stated meeting of Masonic Lodge tomorrow night.

Robert O'Neal of Bishop was a visitor in town early in the week.

Harry Meads passed through town this morning on his way to Bishop, with a 10-horse load of merchandise.

Last Monday the Supreme Court denied a re-hearing to the plaintiffs in the Broder-Conklin suit. This ends the litigation.

A social dance was given at Mairs' Hall last evening, which was well attended and thoroughly enjoyed, despite the heat.

Miss Maud Truscott come down from Bishop last Monday and attended a meeting of the Rebekah Lodge at Independence.

Allie Shannon was in town to-day. He says that his brother Ernest, who had his arm broken at the Molus mine some time ago, is getting along nicely.

C. E. Johnson of the Inyo Soda Works is kept busy supplying Independence with ice-cream. He puts up a first-class article and it gets here in good condition.

Harry Cook came down from Mazourka yesterday with a badly mashed finger for repairs. The boys are now in some 1450 feet and have encountered some hard ground.

Those who were not registered for the last election and who have not attended to that business for the coming political contest, should remember that all registration of voters closes August 14th.

The Sherman-Wrinkle suit, affecting the title to 640 acres of land on the Keeler water front, which was decided in favor of Sherman by Judge Arnot, was reversed by the Supreme Court last week.

Will some agricultural sharp rise and explain just why the local potato crop is so near a failure this year? All other vegetable products are up to a standard and the potato matter appears inexplicable.

E. L. Cross, a mining man from San Francisco, and who has been interested in Panamint mines for some time, arrived at Independence on Monday and in company with Arlie Mairs and Arthur Smith left for Monache yesterday on a hunting and fishing excursion.

The Superior Court has been occupied all week with the case of the People vs DeBorba. The prosecution closed their case yesterday and the defendant is now on the stand testifying in his own behalf. The case may go to the jury tomorrow.

At the meeting of the Democratic County Central Committee held on Friday last, A. W. Eibeshutz, J. White Smith, P. H. Mack and I. H. Mulholland were appointed Delegates to the Democratic State Convention, with power to act in Senatorial and all district nominating conventions except Assembly.

During the past quarter Inyo County paid off $2,000 of the principal of her bonded debt, reducing the annual interest charge by $140. The remaining indebtedness is $60,000, not considering $614 62 in the bond fund applicable to interest account. The $900 "old indebtedness" carried along in the official reports might as well be omitted someway, as it covers old county general fund warrants issued and lost over twenty-five years ago before the old debt was refunded.

Special Meeting of Rebekah Lodge.

On Monday evening at a special meeting of the Olive Rebekah Lodge, No 222, Miss Maud Truscott, District Deputy President, installed the following officers: Miss Maud Cook, Noble Grand; Mrs. J. R. Moffatt, Vice Grand; J. D. Blair, Recording Secretary; Mrs. F. Rhine, Treasurer; John Alexander, Warden; Mrs. P. H. Mack, Inside Guardian; Wells Barnes, Right Support Noble Grand. After the business of the meeting was concluded, the members spent the time socially and partook of ice-cream and cake.

Notice.

The last quarterly Conference of this conference year will be held at Independence M. E. Church on Wednesday, August 3, to commence at 4 o'clock p.m.

All the official board and all interested in church work on the charge are cordially invited to be present.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS.

A rather remarkable incident was the return, unattended, of nine horses from the Inyo County pasturage to Ventura, whence they had been driven several months ago by F. S. Cook. It is presumed the animals broke away from the pastured band and immediately started for home, and as they were missing but three days the distance—several hundred miles, and that mostly through desert country—must have been traversed in that time. Lack of feed and water and sore feet caused by the long trip have left the horses in poor condition. Most of them are the property of J. R. Willoughby.—Pacific Rural Press.

In traveling on the desert this year the absence of rattlesnakes, horn toads, lizards and all small animals is very noticeable. Whether this is due to the exceptionably dry year, or from some other cause is not known; but it is a fact that one can travel all day on the desert and scarcely see a living thing, where rattlesnakes, toads and lizards used to be seen by the hundreds.—Randsburg Miner.

Various Items from Big Pine.

BIG PINE, July 27.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT—The heated term has hastened ripening of grain in this section, and the hum of the thresher will soon be heard in the land. Wheat is unusually fine this season. Samuel Meredith has 15 or 20 acres which will run close to 2 tons per acre. Hay has yielded nicely, and it is hoped that it will bring a fair price.

It is rumored that Archie Farrington will put in a few hundred cords of wood at Alvord for the C. & C. R. R. Co

Some mining locations have lately been made near the old Warrior claim, on Big Pine Creek; good assays of gold indicate the possibility of paying mines in that neighborhood.

S. H. Spratt is running the Baker Creek saw mill to its full capacity, and is turning out excellent lumber. The same is sought for by our loyal citizens for home use. The new saloon and restaurant going up in the south end of the town will be built with Baker Creek lumber. The product of Spratt's mill—where suitable—will also be utilized in the construction of the new school edifice.

The completion of the interior of Josephs' store and the orderly arrangement of his goods and wares makes this emporium an ornament to the business feature of the hamlet.

Charley Walter, of Black Rock, has visited the hamlet, making political prognostications galore—predicting defeat to the "fusion ticket," forecasting nominations, measuring the effects of issues still unborn—all of which was duly entered on the book of remembrance of this pious village for the purpose of aiding the memory of the prophet when the "I told you so" period arrives.

The good people of the hamlet are thankful to the Central Committee for honoring their request in the matter of holding the Convention here, and will strive to acquit themselves properly in their efforts to entertain the delegates and visitors to the meeting.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

There is every prospect that the old Chinese habeas corpus mill will shortly be started up again in the United States Courts. What effect the Chinese treaty and the Exclusion Act will have upon the status of the Hawaiian Chinese is a question that is at once important and interesting. The calamity that would result from the landing of those forty or fifty thousand Chinese in California cannot be overestimated. Every one landed will deprive a white man, woman or boy of employment.

The Supreme Court has just rendered an important decision in regard to promissory notes, which is of interest to any one in business. One who indorses a negotiable instrument before it is delivered to the payee is liable to the payee thereon as an endorser. Each one who writes his name on a promissory note is a party to it, and from its original undertaker. A person may be an endorser upon a promissory note and also a guarantor at the same time.

Blanco claims that he did not consent to the surrender of Santiago. A little later, however, he will consent to the surrender of Havana, and there will be no opportunity for squirming out of it. It is to be hoped that the report that Spain intends to add to her shame by court-martialing Toral is untrue. The general is not to blame for not being a fool.—Call.

Somewhere about 15,000 tons of tailings are being treated monthly at the local cyanide plants—the South End, Standard, Syndicate, Victor and Sunshine. All are producing quantities of bullion, according to capacity. The Dunderburg is not counted, though in operation. When the new Copper Mountain and Lundy plants get to work there will be an enormous lot of sand handled in Mono County. This stuff, which was considered a nuisance a few years ago, is valuable now.—Bodie Miner.

General Shafter has expelled a lot of newspaper correspondents from Santiago, and a much-suffering public will rejoice thereat. The newspapers—the "third estate"—in this democratic country of free speech, may be all right in civil affairs; but on the seat of war, and about the war, they are becoming almost intolerable. The big newspapers are all "yellow." "Fakes," not facts, are the rule.

Oscar Hilton of Bishop arrived in town from Alaska Sunday. He says it cost him $750 to get to Dawson and $350 to get home. He got the scurvy, and says he would not repeat the trip for all the gold in the Klondike.—Hawthorne Bulletin.

"Biggest Show 'Cept One."

A circus was coming to town and every barn and every fence within a radius of 50 miles or so had been billed with the usual lurid circus announcements. An old time darky and a young yellow "dude" were gazing at the bills and wondering.

"Barnum and Bailey's circus. The biggest show on earth," read the youngster.

"What—what's dat?" asked the old time darky, pricking up his ears.

The other read again the legend of the show bills.

"You don' know what you is talking about, nigger. Dat show kain' touch John Robinson's. He useter cum' fro here and dat was a show wuth seein. Dat was the bigges' show on dis earf', sho nuff."

The old man had evidently not been to a circus for many years. The darkies swear by John Robinson throughout the south, anyway.

"Read it for yourself, then," said the dude. "I tell you that thing says this is the biggest show on earth."

The old man proceeded to spell out the big letters. He waded through "Barnum and Bailey," and after a rest began on the remainder of the sentence:

"B-i-g-g-e-s-t s-h-o-w o-n e-a-r-t-h, S-e-p-t. 1."

"I knowed it! I knowed it!" shouted the old man, jumping up and down in his glee. "'De bigges' show, 'cept one,' and dat one was John Robinson's."—Washington Post.

The Effect of Drink.

Senator Vest has a favorite story which he has told on the occasion of many a political speech, but, so far as known, never on the floor of the United States senate.

"A temperance lecturer was struggling against odds in Kentucky," says the senator. "He was talking to a not very large audience that had been drawn to the hall by curiosity. 'The effect of alcohol is to shorten life,' said the lecturer.

"An old man at the rear of the hall rose at that juncture and said, 'You're a liar.'

"'Why?' inquired the advocate of Adam's ale.

"'Because, sir, I've been drinking for 75 years, and I'm 90 and am likely to live to be 100. I am strong enough to lick you if you'll step outside.'

THE RISE OF PEGGY.

PEGGY knew, when she saw her father hurrying up the path, that he was coming to get her to bug potatoes.

This knowledge caused her heart to swell in fierce rebellion. If there was any one thing Peggy disliked more than another it was bugging potatoes. She sighed and began to read, with intense interest, where she had left off a moment before.

"Lady Alfreda's beautiful golden hair was crowned with a tiara of sparkling diamonds. Her slender white wrists were——"

"Peggy, Peggy," called Mr. Hibbard, peremptorily.

"Her slender white wrists," resumed Peggy, "were clasped with many bracelets, each of which was set with precious stones amounting in value to many thousands of dollars. Her taper fingers were——"

"Peggy, do you hear?" called her father again.

Peggy gave one more regretful glance at the paper, with its half-page illustration, then arose and stalked out into the yard with sullen slowness. Mr. Hibbard went around behind the smokehouse, whence he presently returned with two old tin pails and two narrow wooden paddles, which he set down at her feet.

"I guess you'll have to help me a little while again to-day, Peggy," he said, "but it won't be very hard on you. The sun's gone under a clold an' I don't b'leeve the bugs is very thick."

Peggy looked disconsolately at the pail and the paddle. Her father took up his own implements of potato bug torture and began to retrace his steps toward the potato patch. But Peggy did not follow.

"I don't think," she called out bitterly, "that you've got a right to ask me to do such work as this."

He turned and looked at her in unbounded surprise. "She don't think," he repeated, blankly, "that I've got a right to ask her. Now, who," he continued, addressing his remarks to some invisible third person, "do you think has got a right to ask her if I ain't?"

For an instant Peggy hung her head, guiltily. Then, being highly incensed by the painful contrast between her own hard lot and that of Lady Alfreda, she looked up and said, with considerable spirit:

"My own father, sir."

There was a moment's silence. "Her own father," echoed Mr. Hibbard, at length, still directing his conversation to the invisible third person. "Now, will you kindly tell me who is her own father, if I ain't?"

The invisible third person evidently did not feel equal to an explanation of the matter and Peggy took it upon herself to answer.

"Io do not know, sir," she returned, firmly, "but I shall soon find out. You are not he, I am sure. Where you found me, or how you obtained possession of me I cannot tell, but of this much I am positive: you are doing me a great injustice by grinding me down in this manner, and it will not be long until I will be restored to my—my—my——"

Peggy paused then in some confusion. She was not quite sure whether these were the exact words Lady Alfreda had used when declaring to her captors her intuitive knowledge of her noble birth. Peggy had long thought that when she proclaimed her identity to the people with whom she lived and who claimed to be her relatives, she would repeat Lady Alfreda's declaration of independence verbatim, and it flustered her to think that she might have failed to do so. Still, even though she might have made a mistake, she felt that she had put it pretty strong. And she certainly had. At least, so it seemed to Mr. Hibbard.

He hurried forward and laid his hand tremblingly on her shoulder.

"Peggy," he said, anxiously, "I'm afeard you're a losin' your wits, ain't you? Don't yo' feel a little queer in your head? Think a minute. Now, don't yo'?"

Had not Peggy's heart been steeled to an extraordinary degree, it would have been melted by the tender solicitude in his voice and manner. As it was, she drew back unresponsive and regarded him coldly.

"No," she said, "I'm not at all sick—father, and I'm ready to help you. Come on."

She gathered up the paddle and pail allotted to her, and led the way to the nearby corner lot, where the hard-shelled black and yellow potato destroyers were making a morning meal off the tender, juicy leaves. Mr. Hibbard followed, as one in a trance. Neither Peggy nor her father referred to the momentous subject again that day. Mr. Hibbard's heart and head were filled with uneasy speculations on the newly-revealed side of his little daughter's nature. He was laboriously revolving her words in his somewhat dull mind, and striving to comprehend their meaning. Until he arrived at a solution of the problem he would have nothing to say.

As for Peggy, she was too busy with day dreams to talk. She felt confident she was in reality the child of wealthy parents and that the time was near at hand when she should come into possession of her rightful property. That was what happened to Lady Alfreda and other lovely heroines of whom she had read in the weekly illustrated papers, and it was but a natural conclusion that she was destined to enjoy the same good fortune. To be sure, there were many striking differences between herself and Lady Alfreda. For instance, it would require a lively stretch of the imagination to transform Peggy's scant ragged locks into the luxuriant tresses of which Lady Alfreda boasted, and the fancy that could see in Peggy's red, bony hands any resemblance to Lady Alfreda's "slender white wrists" and "taper fingers" would have to be still more elastic.

Peggy unceremoniously dropped her pail, much to the discomfiture of the caged colony of potato bugs, when she realized this and stuck her unprepossessing hands in her pockets and blushed for very shame.

II.

Before breakfast next morning Peggy finished reading the adventures of Lady Alfreda. She had grown quite bold by that time, in consequence of her talk with Mr. Hibbard on the preceding day, and when washing the breakfast dishes she enlarged on the subject with enthusiasm to her cousin George.

"Never mind," she said, with grandiloquent air, when he refused to empty the coffee grounds as requested, "I won't be here long for you to quarrel with."

"I'm going away," she returned blandly. "I'm going to have a rise in the world. My name is not Peggy Hibbard, at all. Bah, what an ugly name! I've tried my best to hit into something pretty and interesting, but I can't do it. It always remains just plain Peggy. I don't know what my last name is, but I'm sure I was christened Queenie or Edith or Elaine or something like that. My own parents are coming for me soon."

"Huh!" said George, in derision. But he emptied the coffee grounds and was quite obedient for almost an hour afterward, all of which Peggy regarded as unmistakable evidence that he had more or less faith in what she had told him.

Peggy was kept unusually busy in those days. She and her aunt, Mrs. Morrison, did all the housework, and as a sick neighbor, who had been a life-long friend of the family, required a great deal of her aunt's attention, many new duties devolved upon Peggy. This additional work was not exactly relished, but in one sense the situation was delightful. Peggy was left alone more than she had been heretofore, and the unusual solitude gave her ample opportunity to converse with her relatives undisturbed when they should come to claim her.

III.

The next day, when carrying in an armful of stovewood, with which to cook the noonday meal, she heard the sound of wheels on the white turnpike. They stopped at the front gate, and Peggy, peeping furtively around the corner of the house, beheld a sight which drove every drop of blood in her veins with a rush to her heart, and made her arms so limp and lifeless that the load of wood fell with a crash on her bare toes.

A carriage had been driven into the shade of the apple tree that grew near the roadside. Undoubtedly it was the carriage. It was not exactly what she had expected, for there were only two horses instead of four, and the harness was not made of gold, but it was a very stylish turnout withal, and Peggy thought she could be satisfied with it. A middle-aged woman and gentleman alighted and came rapidly toward the house. Peggy went forth to meet them, looking shame-facedly the while at her bare feet and little red hands.

"Ah," said the gentleman, kindly, "I believe we have her here, Susan. My child, are you Peggy Hibbard?"

"No, sir," returned Peggy, promptly.

A shadow of disappointment passed over the faces of the lady and gentleman.

"That's too bad," said the lady, "but perhaps you can tell us where to find her."

Peggy plaited the corner of her apron nervously for a moment, then, looking up courageously, she said: "I am called Peggy Hibbard."

"My goodness, and are you not she?" exclaimed the lady.

"No," said Peggy, glibly. "I must have been changed when I was a baby, or something, and the mistake has never been rectified. I have never been able to find out what the name of my father really is. I hoped, sir, that you were he. Are you not, and have you not come to give me a rise in the world and take me home to your palace?"

Peggy spoke with great earnestness, for she had dreamed over this phase of her life so much that she had come to believe in its reality. The lady and gentleman stared at her in bewilderment.

"I don't understand what you mean," said the lady, sadly. "We have no little girl. Our granddaughter died, too, a few weeks ago. But we will think over what you have said, and make further inquiries about you. After we have seen Mr. Hibbard perhaps you will hear from us again."

"I DON'T THINK YOU'VE GOT A RIGHT TO ASK ME TO DO SUCH WORK."

They drove away down the dusty turnpike and Peggy threw herself down on the garden mold and wept bitterly. "Even they have gone back on me," she sobbed. "They have left me here and I'll have to go back into that hateful kitchen and cook something for father and the boys. I can't do it, so there."

But she did, and her father praised her effort by saying that he had never sat down to a better meal.

In the meantime the lady and gentleman, all unconscious of the grief their visit had occasioned, were wending their way thoughtfully back to Squire Hooper's house, whence they had started out an hour before.

"I don't see what you sent us over there for," said the gentleman, as soon as they entered the sitting-room. When we told you that our errand in this neighborhood is to pick out a bright little girl whose parents are poor and unable to educate her as she deserves and wishes we were in earnest, and expected you to recommend somebody who is worthy. But that Hibbard girl is a regular little lunatic. She said her name is not Hibbard; that she is the child of wealthy parents who will give her a rise in the world, and all that sort of tommy-rot. We were so surprised we came away without seeing Mr. Hibbard."

"I don't know what to make of it," sighed Mrs. Hooper. "Here comes her aunt, Hannah Morrison, down the road, now. I'll call her in and consult her."

"It's the very thing that's been worrying her father to death yesterday and to-day," said Mrs. Morrison, when the quest of the middle-aged couple had been explained to her. "I'm afraid her mind's upset by reading so many impossible, sensational stories. I can't watch her all the time, having so much to do, and she will borrow those papers and read them when I'm not looking. I'm sure I'm obliged to you all for your kind intentions toward Peggy. She's sharp as a whip. It's a shame we can't afford to give her more advantages. I hope you'll overlook her crazy notions and give her a trial."

But the middle-aged couple were extremely matter-of-fact people. They felt rather dubious about taking under their protection a child who talked in riddles, and after due deliberation they returned to their home without having made any arrangements for the education of a bright little girl who was unable to help herself.

"MY NAME IS NOT PEGGY HIBBARD."

IV.

But they came again a year later. "We are looking for Peggy Hibbard," said the old gentleman, with a merry twinkle in his gray eyes.

Peggy had learned many things during those twelve months. She had come to realize that a "rise" had come in her way, which, although not the kind she was looking for, was the best "rise" that can come to a person in this world, and she deeply regretted having lost it. In view of all this, she answered, modestly, "I am she."

When they went away Peggy accompanied them. They did not startle the neighbors with gold harness and "an unlimited wardrobe," but for all that Peggy was very happy. The next summer, when she was home during vacation, she voluntarily hunted a tin pail and a wooden paddle, and went with her father to the potato patch.

"I don't really like this kind of work," she said, "but I've come to the conclusion that I can't have everything my own was, as did Lady Alfreda. Somehow I've lost all interest in her golden hair and slender white wrists."

When they returned to the house her father brought out the big family Bible and opened it at the record of births. "See," he said, pointing to the top line. "Peggy, daughter of Hiram and Alice Hibbard. Born December 12, 1881." There it is as plain as life; every-day, commonplace 'Peggy.' Have yo' given up tryin' to make somethin' flowery out of it?"

Peggy blushed to the roots of her hair, which was still carrotty and stringy. "Long ago," she said, meekly.

"An' yo' b'leeve the record in the Bible, now, don't you, dear child?" he asked, anxiously. "Yo' b'leeve that 'm your sure enough father, an' you ain't expectin' any great rise, are yo'? Yo' ain't ashamed o' me an' my name?"

Peggy held his hard hand in hers, and when she saw a teardrop glistening there, she did not know whether it had fallen from his eye or her own.

"Father, dear father," she said, softly.—Omaha Bee.

A Cat's Loyalty to Home.

Black Tom, the big cat who made his headquarters at Mermod & Jaccard's for years, escaped from the fire with barely a whisker singed. He doesn't approve of the new location of the firm. The Monday after the fire one of the clerks caught him prowling around the ruins, and carried him over to the new store.

Tom inspected the premises carefully, and received the greetings of his old friends. Then he hoisted his tail and sallied out to watch the salvage men at work.

As soon as the ruins cooled sufficiently he established headquarters in them, and steadfastly refused to return to the new store.

Where he gets his provender is not known, but he seems well satisfied. Divers inducements have been held out to get him to go to the new store, but he scorns them as efforts to draw him into a refutation of the theory that cats become attached to places and not to individuals.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

No Taxes to Pay There.

Klingenberg-am-Main, in Franconia, as a result of the municipality engaging in business, has no taxes to pay and distributes profits to the individual citizens. The town runs terra cotta works, the profits of which last year, after the town expenses had been paid, were 90,000 marks.

Children complain because they are compelled to go to school five days in a week, but after they are grown, they will find it necessary to go to school seven days a week, and occasionally at night.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Manila.—The God of nations intervened in the harbor of Manila for the suffering, famine-stricken and dying Cubans.—Rev. E. C. Dutcher, Methodist, Jersey City, N. J.

Dwarfed Manhood.—Man is a social being. He was born so. His faculties are dwarfed if he remains isolated from his fellows.—Rev. Robert Macdonald, Baptist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Woman's Sphere.—Woman has a peculiar sphere in life that is all her own. This sphere is not antagonistic but supplemental to man's sphere.—Rev. W. A. Stanton, Presbyterian, Pittsburg, Pa.

Unselfishness.—Grand as the Puritan principles were, they are not enough. It is time to know that no man can call Christ his and forget his neighbor.—Rev. W. S. Rainsford, Episcopalian, New York City.

The Great Cities.—The government of cities is truly a present-day question. They will continue to increase. The drift of the multitude is toward them—a drift greatly to be deplored.—Rev. H. C. Swentzel, Episcopalian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

National Progress.—The people of the United States stand before the nations of the world to-day in the van of the march toward real progress and the maintenance of equal rights for all men.—Rev. J. B. Shaw, Presbyterian, New York City.

Well Doing.—God wants you to serve him just where you are, and with just what you have, and he rewards not according to achievement, but according to faithfulness. It is the well-doing that meets from him the "well-done."—Rev. H. H. Barbour, Baptist, Columbus, Ohio.

Not in Solitude.—You are never alone. Like an amphitheater throng, gazing breathlessly upon a contest in the arena, an unseen audience ceaselessly watches you. Your soul's destiny threads the farthest eternity.—Rev. S. E. Young, Presbyterian, Pittsburg, Pa.

Freedom.—As a moral agent, the nation should be the incarnation of freedom. Its freedom consists in the assertion of its personality. To be free is simply to be itself and to fulfill the mission for which God has given it existence.—Rev. H. MacAyral, Congregationalist, Omaha, Neb.

Life Eternal.—The most complex organism is the longest lived. The bird has a more complex organism than an insect, hence it is longer lived. Redeemed man in Christ is the climax of creation, and he shall have life eternal.—Rev. W. G. Patridge, Baptist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Old Glory.—We do not want Spanish land, but we want heaven's justice, and millions of men dare to march behind Old Glory to recover it. The stars and stripes never stood so near the blood-stained banner of the cross as they do to-day.—Rev. Cortland Myers, Baptist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Light of Day.—Let the nation, let the individual, indulge no secret and selfish purpose that will not bear the light of day. Let it be our supreme prayer to be like him who is love itself, in whom is no darkness at all, and who has put all manner of self-life under his feet. Let his image and likeness reign supreme in our heart of hearts.—Rev. John Goddard, Swedenborgian, Cincinnati, Ohio.

A Nation's Character.—A nation is only for the purpose of developing character. The nations of the earth are calling to each other and saying, "Show us your typical character." Slav, Latin and Saxon are answering the question. As was recently said, "some nations are dying and some are growing strong;" but below the superficial signs it is a question of character which each nation develops that determines life or death. This is all a lesson in patriotism.—Rev. L. M. Clarke, Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Roll in Billville.

We called the roll in Billville: "Major General Jones!"
Wouldn't do for service, for he's only skin and bones.
"Captain Stutter Splutter!" Rheumatism (bad);
And it's settled for the summer in the only leg he had!

"Colonel Slumpkin Bumpkins!" At present out of sight;
Went off to chase a private who escaped him in the night.
"Lieutenant Billup Fillup!" Can only fight on land;
Is only used to swimming in a millpond—over-hand.

"Major Shoddy Toddy!" No bullets make him wince;
Fought through to Appomattox, and been half-shot ever since.
"General Morgan Moonshine!" His patriotism fills
A brimming gallon measure, and he'll fortify the "stills."

Colonels, generals, majors and captains by the score—
Train loads of officers, and trains still bringing more and more!
Commissioned officers enough to fill the world with woe,
And just one living private, and—he's hired to a show!

Why He Wondered.

A man who went away from home some time ago to attend a convention of church people was struck with the beauty of the little town in which the gathering was held. He had plenty of time, and while wandering about walked into the village cemetery. It was a beautiful place, and the delegate walked around among the graves. He saw a monument, one of the largest in the cemetery, and read with surprise the inscription on it, "A Lawyer and an Honest Man." The delegate scratched his head and looked at the monument again. He read the inscription over and over. Then he walked all around the monument and examined the grave closely. Another man in the cemetery approached and asked him:

"Have you found the grave of an old friend?"

"No," said the delegate, "but I was wondering how they came to bury those two fellows in one grave."—St. Joseph News.

A Pertinent Query.

The little boy was with his mother at a theater in Louisville. The play was "Jim, the Penman," and was the scene where Jim displays 65 £100 bank notes. The little boy was very inquisitive, and while he heard Mr. Eagle speaking of the pound notes he asked his mother how much money a pound was.

When he was told that it was about $5 in American money, he sat silent and thoughtful for awhile. Then he said, "Sixty-five thousand pounds would be quite a big fortune for a man to have, wouldn't it, mamma?"

Answered in the affirmative, he thought for awhile. Then he asked, "Mamma, if Mr. Eagle has so much money why does he work so hard at this theater when he could be having a bully good time spending those bank notes?"—Louisville Commercial.

Hawthorne and D'Aubepine.

As a nom de plume for a great deal of his work Hawthorne assumed the French translation of his name. His stories in The Democratic Review of this time are attributed to M. d'Aubepine. Lowell says of him in his Concord address: "You would think me extravagant, I fear, if I said how highly I rate the genius of Hawthorne in the history of literature. At any rate, Hawthorne taught us one great and needful lesson, and that is that our own past was an ample storehouse for the brightest works of imagination and fancy."

CAN OUR COAST BE EFFECTUALLY BLOCKADED?

If confidence can be felt in the opinion of military and naval officers in high places at the seat of government, such is the vast extent of our sea coast to blockade it effectually, even if our navy and sea coast defences could offer no adequate resistance, seems to be impossible. When a blockade of the bowels exists, relieve constipation with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which conquers dyspepsia, malaria, rheumatism and kidney trouble.

THE TYRANT OF THE HOUSE.

While baby sleeps—
We cannot jump, or dance, or sing,
Play jolly games or do a thing
To make a noise. The floor might creak
If we should walk! We scarcely speak,
Or breathe, while baby takes a nap,
Lest we should wake the little chap!
A strict watch nursie always keeps
While baby sleeps!

When baby wakes
But little gratitude he shows,
When other people want to doze!
At night, when folks have gone to bed,
He rouses them all up instead,
To wait on him. Ma lights the lamp,
And warms milk for the little scamp!
Pa walks him up and down the floor,
Sometimes two hours and sometimes more!
And nurse comes running in a stew,
To see what she for him can do!
And Will and Harry, at the row,
Call: "What's the matter with him now?"
And I'm waked up at all the clatter
To wonder what on earth's the matter!
Such uproar in the house he makes,
When baby wakes!

So if asleep, or if awake,
The house exists but for his sake,
And such a tiny fellow—he
To be boss of this family!

HELEN'S TWO LOVERS

WAS he glad? Was he sorry? Did he feel triumphant? Did he feel bitterly ashamed?

Will Spencer asked himself these questions over and over, wearying of the repetition and yet never able to end it by saying heartily that he was glad and triumphant, or bitterly that he was sorry and ashamed. The plain face stared him in the face, that Helen Raymond did not love him and that Mrs. Raymond had urged his suit, and exerted her maternal influence and eloquence until Helen had consented to be his wife, telling him very frankly that her heart was in the grave of her lover, George Vanhorn, who had been killed in a railway collision nearly one year before.

"Mother was never willing I should marry George," Helen said, sadly, "because he was poor and we have suffered all that poverty can inflict. He was on his way to Colorado, where his brother had been successful, when he was killed.

Will Spencer winced, for he was rich, very rich, but then he put to the wound that soothing salve, "I will win her love when she is my wife," that has wrecked so many lives. It may come, this love that will not be hidden, to a man and wife, after they are bound together for life, but the risk is great, and Will Spencer knew it.

Yet he cherished the delusion that love in the end would win a return, and he knew his own love to be strong and enduring. He had stepped back when George Vanhorn was met with such a smile, as he could never win, had kept from pressing his suit when the name of Helen's lover appeared on the list of the killed in the account of the railway collision, but after the lapse of several months he had won Mrs. Raymond to his side and so, by proxy, wooed Helen and won—what? a cold, reluctant consent to be his wife.

Yet she was not cold, this girl of 20, whose heart had been crushed ever since the day when George Vanhorn's name was recorded as dead. He could have told how her eyes could soften with love's tenderness, her cheeks burn with love's blushes, her low, sweet, voice tremble with love's whispered words. He had won what all the Spencer gold, the riches of long generations, could not buy.

Before that fatal railway collision she was a bright, beautiful girl, with large, expressive brown eyes, a voice of music, the step of a fairy, singing as a bird sings, from sheer joyousness of heart, bringing a jest to all the household worries, laughing merrily over her own blunders in the culinary department, turning old dresses, renovating old bonnets without a complaint, living on love and hope.

After that day she moved about slowly, her eyes were dull and weary, her duties met with a rigid mechanical precision, her lips compressed, her cheeks pale, as shadow of her joyous self.

Mrs. Raymond was often afraid that she would yet miss the golden prize she had partly won, and heartily seconded Will in his preparations for a speedy wedding. It was Mrs. Raymond who went with him to open the house that he had bought to adorn for his bride, who aided him in the selection of carpens, curtains, furniture, and gave him instructions regarding the kitchen department, of whose needs he was as ignorant as most young bachelors. It was Mrs. Raymond who received an anonymous letter containing a liberal sum, which she quietly appropriated for a trousseau and a suitable dress for the bride's mother.

She was a woman of rare tact. Having won Helen's consent to be Will Spencer's wife, she never bothered her by complaints about her listness indifference to her lover or her future prospects. She simply made all the arrangements for her, without once admitting a possibility of change. The betrothal was spoken of on all occasions, the preparation of the house, the selection of the trousseau referred to, in matter of fact words that made Helen feel, as it was intended she should, that she had walked into a net from which there was no escape.

And Will Spencer know it all, and writhed under the knowledge, being a frank, loyal man, whose impulses were generous and honorable, and who loved Helen with all the strength of his heart. Often he asked himself how he could endure life, if he found his wife a faithful slave, instead of the happy companion he had hoped to make her.

"If she never loves me," he thought, bitterly. "If all my love fails to win hers, what will my life be?"

He did her justice. He knew that if his love failed to win her heart, his gold was powerless to make her happy. He knew that if her mother died or could not be benefited by her marriage, she would rather beg her bread herself than be his wife.

While matters stood in this unsatisfactory state, Mrs. Raymond made a suggestion: "I want you to go away for a month," she said to him, "and let Helen miss the constant devotion that she has had ever since your betrothal. Let her feel that a void has come into her life, and how dull and cheerless it would be if she lost you. The wedding day is set for June 10, and this is April. Stay away until the 5th or 6th of June."

It seemed to him good advice and he had business in the West that would fill his time profitably. It gave him the first really happy moment of his engagement, when Helen said gently, yet with a shudder:

"I cannot bear to think of you on railway trains, Will. Write often, that I may know you are safe."

Her lips met his in a tender pressure, such as a loving sister might bestow, but with far more affection than she had ever before given him. Was he winning her? The hope made this unexpected absence endurable, and for two weeks life held more pleasure than it had done in all the days of his courtship.

Then came a blow, sudden, sharp, overwhelming! He was in a large Western city, when, after night, returning to his hotel, a man on crutches asked for charity. The voice was familiar, and, in a shock of horror, the face struck him. One gasping cry escaped him:

"George Vanhorn!"

The man would have hurried away, but he followed easily.

"Let me go, Spencer!" the crippled man pleaded. "I did not recognize you! Don't you know I am dead?"

"I know you are coming in here with me," Will said gently, substituting his arm for one of the crutches and entering the hotel where he had a room. "Steady now!" and he led him, feeling how he trembled, until he had him seated in a great arm-chair in his room, and felt his heart stirred with deepest compassion at the havoc pain and poverty had made.

He would not let his guest speak until he had ordered a supper and made him comfortable. Then, turning to him, he saw he was weeping.

"See what a woman you make of me!" the poor fellow said. "You thought I was dead?"

"Yes! All your friends think so."

"It was a narrow escape, and I wonder why I was spared. Nine months in a public hospital have left me crippled and incurably ill. They would not keep me after I could get about on crutches, but I have begged or starved, and it will not be for long! I would not let anyone know for fear it would get to—to—Helen?"

"You want to hide from her?"

"Yes—yes! What would her life be tied to mine? You will not betray me, Spencer?"

"But you may recover."

"No. I should only be a wreck if I could, but I cannot. I have internal injuries that the cold and hunger of last winter have increased fatally."

Will Spencer literally could not speak. This man asked of him only the silence that would give him his wife. Could he let Helen remain in ignorance of this strange adventure the memory of her old love might die away in time.

When he could speak again he led the conversation to Helen. He was very frank, telling George Vanhorn how truly he had been mourned, but saying nothing of his own hopes, and it was easy to see how George had loved her, how utterly self-sacrificing his silence had been. To spare her pain, he had kept from her all knowledge of his own suffering.

But his pride yielded to Will's entreaties to be allowed to befriend him. He was very weak, very ill, and he allowed Will to get him a pleasant room in a quiet boarding house, to furnish him with necessary clothing, to engage a doctor, and to take a brother's place beside him.

And then true, unselfish love triumphed.

"She will never marry me," Will thought, ruefully, as he folded a long, long letter, "but she shall not be cheated out of what little happiness life may still hold for her."

He wrote, too, to Mrs. Raymond, a letter that caused that respectable lady to grind her teeth, but which she obeyed, packing her trunk and accompanying Helen in the journey westward.

It was Will Spencer who met the two at the depot, and accompanied them to the boarding house where he kept Mrs. Raymond in the parlor after sending Helen upstairs, alone. It was Will Spencer who smoothed away every difficulty, engaging rooms for mother and daughter and quietly effacing himself.

It were far too long a story to try to record the three months that followed. George Vanhorn was resolute on one point. He would not marry Helen. He had no hope of recovery, but if the unexpected should happen, he would not risk ruining Helen's life by binding it to his.

"Oh," she would cry, "what am I to deserve the love of two such men? Mother, it humbles me to think how they love me."

And by this love her courage was sustained through the three months when she and her mother smoothed George Vanhorn's path to the grave. Such happiness as could be hers, she knew that she owed to Will Spencer, who showed his love only by his care of the invalid. He never spoke of love to her, giving her up entirely, but upon her lover he lavished every kindness wealth could procure, or friendship dictate. He gave him a brother's devotion until the last parting came, and when he was laid in the cemetery, Will Spencer took Helen and Mrs. Raymond back to their home and left them.

It was three years later when he came home from a European tour and called on Mrs. Raymond.

"The old lady, sir, is dead," the servant told him, "an' Miss Helen's livin' in —— street. Maybe yees didn't hear she's come into some money from her uncle, sir, and Mrs. Gandy, she's took this house, sor."

Come into some money! Well, she did not need him. He would wait awhile. But in a few days a little note reached him:

"It was unkind to let me hear of your return by accident. Will you not come to see me?"

Would he not? And when he went he could not keep the love out of his eyes or his voice, and she—at last! Her eyes drooped under his gaze, her cheeks blushed for him, her voice faltered with tenderness. He had won his bride! And he had no secret hidden from her loving eyes, no treachery he would dread to have her discover. By the frankness he had thought would alienate her forever, he had won her true, faithful love, a devotion as entire as that she had given in her girlhood to the man he had so nobly befriended.—New York Ledger.

THE FIRST TORPEDO.

Exploded Too Soon to Destroy a Federal Gunboat.

Mr. R. O. Crowley, formerly electrician of the Torpedo Division, C. S. N., contributes to the Century an account of "The Confederate Torpedo Service." After describing the organization of the first torpedo service, Mr. Crowley says:

Having our system now perfected, we established a torpedo station, some five or six miles below Richmond, by submerging two iron tanks, containing one thousand pounds of powder each, in twelve feet of water, leading the wires ashore, and connecting them with a galvanic battery concealed in a small hut in a deep ravine. From the battery-house the wires were led to an elevated position near by, where the man in charge could keep a lookout for passing vessels. The position of the torpedoes in the water was indicated by two sticks, planted about ten feet apart on the bluff, and in a line with each other and the torpedoes; and the watchman's instructions were to explode them by contracting the wires as soon as an enemy's vessel should be on a line with the two pointers. All this being prepared, we awaited the approach of a Federal gunboat. As was usually the case, one came when least expected, on a beautiful clear day, when our entire force except the man stationed as lookout was absent in Richmond, preparing other war material.

We were apprised by telegraph of the rapid approach of the gunboat, and immediately hastened toward our first station; but we arrived too late. The man in charge had not seen the United States flag for a long period, and never having previously seen a gunboat so near, lost his presence of mind, and fired one of the 1,000-pound powder-tanks when the gunboat was at least twenty to thirty yards distant. A great explosion took place, throwing up a large column of water to a considerable height; and the gunboat by her momentum plunged into the great trough, and caught the downward rush of a wave on her forward deck. The guards were broken away, half a dozen men were thrown overboard, and other damage to the gunboat was caused. The steamer then turned about as quickly as she could, and prepared to retrace her route down the river, after picking up the men who had been washed overboard. There was a brilliant opportunity to accomplish her total destruction by firing the remaining torpedo as she passed back over it. But alas! the man had been so astounded at the first explosion that he had fled precipitately, without waiting to see what damage had been done, and the gunboat was thus enabled to return down the river in safety.

Hammer Toes.

Another one came into the room. He passed muster at first all right. "Take off your shoes." Off came the fellow's shoes, and it was found he had hammer toes.

"You'll never get through with hammer toes," said Capt. Baker. "Never in the world," repeated Capt. Hogan.

"I'm sorry for you," said Capt. Baker, and the boy's face grew to be three feet longer as he spoke.

"Hammer toes, what's them?" he asked. "I never heard of hammer toes before. They don't bother me none. I can walk ten miles quicker than any man in this room."

"The only thing you can do is to get that hammer toe cut off if you want to get through," said Capt. Baker.

The boy's face grew a shade paler and he left the room quickly and without further remark. Perhaps he intended to get the hammer toe amputated. Hammer toe is the name given to toes which turn downward at the tips.—Portland Times.

Turkish Octroi.

Most Turkish towns are surrounded by walls, and officials are usually stationed at the gates to collect a tax on everything that comes in for sale. A recent traveler tells a story of a peasant who wanted to take a cheese into town, but finding that the tax was beyond his purse, he sat down and ate the cheese, whereupon he was allowed to take it in free.—New York Evening Post.

Before marriage a man declares himself unworthy of his sweetheart's love and after marriage he spends about two-thirds of his time in proving it.

UNCLE SAM'S BLUE UNIFORMS

GENERAL MILES is reported to be contemplating important changes in the uniforms now worn by the soldiers of the United States regular army. At a recent reception at the White House the General appeared in a gorgeous new tunic of his own design, liberally adorned with gold and lace, and wearing a sash of alternate yellow and gold stripes. The most remarkable point about the uniform, however, was not the splendor of the facings as the prominence of the oak leaf and acorn decorations;

THE PURITAN SOLDIER. 1776.

a curious fact, as these are supposed to be the distinctive military emblems of the British crown. General Miles, however, intimates that he is going to take the best features of every nation's dress regulations and incorporate them into his new system for the clothing of the American army.

In the stirring times of the Revolutionary period the dress of many of the patriot regiments was at once quaint and picturesque. Many of the troops, prominent among them the First Virginia regiment in 1775, were clothed at their own expense in leather hunting shirts, leggings and caps, trimmed with fur—a dress that Washington recommended to all those who were unable to obtain the regular uniform, saying that "the leather hunting shirt inspired terror in the heart of the British soldier, as the latter believed that its wearer must necessarily be a sharpshooter." On reflection, one can hardly blame the Britisher for his timidity in approaching the fearless backwoodsmen. The Pennsylvania regiments, facetiously dubbed the "Quaker brigade," were remarkable for the excessive plainness of their uniforms, which were modestly made of buff-colored cloth, trimmed and faced with brown. What a contrast to the gay trappings of the troopers known as Moylan's dragoons, described as wearing "green short coats turned up with red, waistcoats of red cloth, buckskin breeches and a leather cap, trimmed with bearskin, a flowing mane of horsehair hanging from a curved brass crest at the top."

In 1802 the then commander-in-chief issued an order that the collars of all privates' coats should not be less than three inches high nor more than 3½; ten years later the height was increased "to reach as far as the tip of the ear at the side and back, and in front as high as the chin would permit in turning the head." These preposterous collars were afterward replaced by the equally uncomfortable stocks but a more rational measure brought into vogue the present low collar of soft cloth, supplemented in the case of officers by an ordinary civilian collar.

In this connection it is interesting to recall some of the curious uniforms which the brave defenders of our great republic have from time to time adopted, either through choice or necessity. Who would ever imagine that our soldiers once wore the tall silk hat of the modern society gentlemen? Yet in 1810 an order was issued directing that all the privates be supplied with the "chimney-pot hat" of to-day, and this extraordinary kind of military headgear continued until 1812, when it was replaced by a more ornate covering, described in the regulations as "a leather cap, bell-crowned, adorned in front with a yellow eagle made of brass-work, embossed with the regimental number; a white pompon in front and a black cockade at the side, made of leather." Certainly it was a more serviceable hat than its predecessor, and more suggestive of the martial spirit that inspired its wearers to their brilliant deeds of valor in the struggle of that year. But the day of the pot hat was not yet done; in 1821 the cadets at the Military Academy at West Point were requested to adopt the pattern which had been condemned as an unsoldierlike hat-covering but nine years before, and great was the wrath of these embryo Washingtons and Jacksons at the indignity which, they declared, had been put upon them. But their dislike soon gave way to a feeling of respect for the uniform, and perhaps to this fact is due the enormous popularity of the tall hat among American citizens.

President Monroe decided, toward the end of 1821, that the uniforms of the various regiments should all be dark blue in color, and that this was to be in future the national color; the West Point cadets to have gray coats and trousers, while the regimental musicians were to be distinguished by their red coats.

Some of the uniforms of the old Continental army days were undoubtedly very picturesque and imposing; for instance, let us take the Governor of Connecticut's regiment of foot guards, organized in 1771. There were two companies, the first of which wore scarlet-colored coats, richly covered with gold lace and faced with black; buff cassimere waistcoats and buff cloth breeches, high bearskin hats or "bushes," and black leggings. The second company, however, outdid the first in magnificence by the adoption of white vests, breeches and stockings, ruffled shirts and silver buttons! In addition one must remember the long powdered ones and clean-shaven faces of the period, so as to form an adequate idea of the imposing appearance of those tall, well-built sons of Mars. But think of a soldier wearing white stockings and breeches!

Washington's own uniform as commander-in-chief of the army was very simple and unpretentious as compared with General Miles' latest "turnout."

WOMEN'S AID IN THE WAR.

Relief Association Furnishing Money for Various Purposes.

It only costs 25 cents to become a member of the Woman's National War Relief Association. For the amount named any woman may secure the privilege of signing this pledge:

"I, the undersigned, hereby declare my allegiance to the United States of America and my desire to contribute to the general welfare, health and comfort of the men engaged in the military and naval service of the republic in the present war."

The executive committee of the association includes a number of society leaders in New York, including Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Miss Helen Gould and Mrs. Daniel Lamont. Originally the plan was to outfit and man a hospital ship with nurses. On application to army and naval officials it was discovered that such a project was impracticable. Secretary Long, Surgeon General Sternberg of the army and Surgeon General Van Ruypen of the navy all advised that the relief association collect funds only, which the authorities would disburse for supplies and nurses as need demanded. General Wesley Merritt lent his influence to further the organization and the association promptly devoted itself to the collection of money. From time to time the surgeon generals will send a list of the objects for which the asso-

UNSPOKEN SYMPATHY.

Children Who Were Careful Not to Hurt an Uncle's Feeling.

He was a big, burly, good-natured conductor on a country railroad, and he had watched them with much interest as they got on the train. They were two handsome, round-faced, rosy-cheeked boys, and three sunny-haired, pretty little girls of various sizes and ages. A grave, kind-looking gentleman, evidently their guardian, got in with them, and the conductor's attention was soon caught by the fact that the apparently eager conversation was carried on by means of a deaf-and-dumb alphabet, the gentleman joining in so pleasantly that the conductor beamed on him with approval. Naturally kind-hearted himself, it pleased him to see this trait in others. But his honest eyes were misty as he thought of his own noisy crowd of youngsters at home and contrasted them with this prim little company who smiled and gesticulated, but made no sound.

It was plain they were off on a holiday jaunt, for they all had satchels and wore a festive, "go-away" air, and the conductor, whose fancy played about them continually, settled it in his mind that they belonged to some asylum, and were going with their teacher for a vacation trip. He couldn't help watching them, and nodding to them as he passed through the car. They returned his greeting in kind, being cheerful little souls, and he began to look forward with regret to the time of parting.

At length, at one of the rural stations, the gentleman kissed the young ones hurriedly all round and got off the train. They leaned out of the windows and waved enthusiastic farewells as the car moved on; then the biggest "little girl" took a brown-paper bag from her satchel and distributed crackers in even shares. The conductor, in passing, smiled and nodded as usual, as the little girl held out the paper bag to him.

"Do have some," she said.

He started back in sheer amazement.

"Why," he exclaimed, "you can talk then—all of you?"

"Of course!" they cried in chorus.

The conductor sank into the seat across the aisle. "I thought you were deaf and dumb," he gasped.

"Oh, how funny!" cried one of the rosy-cheeked boys. "Why, that was Uncle Jack, poor fellow! He was born that way. We wouldn't talk while he was with us; it might hurt his feelings, you know. Hello! here's our station. Come on, girls!" And the five trooped noisily out, and waved their handkerchiefs from the platform as the train moved on.—St. Nicholas.

Paid His Creditors in Full.

A case of rather remarkable commercial honesty has just come to light. In 1875 one of Springfield's well-known shoe dealers found himself so embarrassed by depreciation in value of stock and the difficulty in collecting accounts that he failed and made a compromise with his creditors of 50 cents on the dollar. After twenty-two years the merchant, now considerably over 70 years old, has settled all these old claims in full, paying the balance unpaid at that time, amounting to several thousand dollars.

There was no claim on him other than that of his conscience. All his creditors had signed a paper acknowledging their satisfaction, and, in fact, a large number of original papers had been destroyed, so that the merchant had to settle in accordance with the figures he had in his possession, paying over the money in some cases to heirs or to surviving partners, who knew nothing or had nothing to show of the original transaction. The conscientious old shoe dealer is very anxious not to have his name appear—his act would lose its merit through advertising, he says. A good deal of the money that he has thus paid back has been pounded out on the shoemaker's bench.—Boston Transcript.

New Island Off Borneo.

A sensation has been created in the Straits Settlements and the far East by the sudden appearance of a new island off the coast of Borneo, between Nemtakol and Lumbidan. The island is 45 feet high, a third of a mile long, and a quarter of a mile wide. For the most part the island is merely an upheaval of the bottom of the sea, but at its highest point there is a distinct land crater, with the cone-shaped top and sides fallen in. The sides of the cone give evidence of having been forced up through a crevice in solid rock. The British North Borneo Herald says the cone, which is thirty yards in diameter, is surrounded by another and larger cone, which shows that with more pressure from beneath a much larger crater would have been formed. The rising of the island was not accompanied by any volcanic disturbance. The crater is seamed with crevices and cracks which emit gases. By applying a torch to a small crack in the crater the gas ignites and burns steadily.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Musical Aids to Marchers.

A French general has inaugurated a plan of permitting soldiers to sing when on the march, a privilege which has been strictly denied until recently. It has also been arranged that any soldier who can play on any of the smaller musical instruments shall be provided with such instrument at the expense of the State.

From the great Sierra Nevada water flow to Owens Valley sufficient power could be derived to operate a railroad from Bishop to Mojave and not half try. Dr. Charles Van Norden, of Sacramento, has solved the problem of utilizing and applying to machinery the power contained in the water that the snow-capped peaks of the Sierra Nevada mountains have been shedding for centuries. Colis P. Huntington considers the plan feasible and before very long his trains may be moved back and forth over the divide by power generated from mountain snow. The South Yuba Ditch Company owns a water-shed covering twelve square miles in Summit Valley, at the extreme top of the Sierras. Van Norden's scheme is to operate the road by electricity between Sacramento and Verdi, a distance of 144 miles, the power in each case being generated from the water stored in the water shed at Summit Valley. It is impossible at present to run more than fifteen trains over the divide in one day. The projector claims that his scheme will permit the operation of sixty, and as many more as can be placed on the rails with safety.

In an article in a recent number of the Rural Californian, of Los Angeles, speaking of irrigation in Nevada, Col. Maxon said in part: "The Humboldt River alone, rising near the eastern boundary, flows westward 350 miles, and then spreads out in a lake ten miles wide and twelve long and is evaporated by the winds and a dry atmosphere, whereas with the proper storage of water along its tributaries, to be used during the irrigation season, probably one million acres of good land could be cultivated from it, and probably more." In the main, the conditions the same as to Owens River. There is no question as to what water storage will do, but how is it to be done—financially? On the same principle that it drains rivers and harbors for the benefit of commerce, the United States Governmeet ought to provide for irrigation for the benefit of the people, and the problem would not be so hard to solve if the Government had not already let so much of the desert land go to private ownership.

Great activity, says Bradstreet's, is reported at the various United States mints. The Director is reported bending every energy to supply the demand for coinage and at the same time perform the additional work devolving upon the mints by reason of the provisions of the war revenue law requiring the coinage of 1,500,000 a month out of the bullion in the treasury. "We are working the mints two shifts of eight hours a day now," said Mr. Roberts recently. "The New Orleans mint was put to work on silver dollars on July 11; the Philadelphia and San Francisco mints began the job last week. The intention is to first comply with the demands of the law, and then, so far as our facilities will permit, supply the calls for other coin. At present there is an immense stock of gold bullion on hand, and just as fast as possible we shall turn that into coin." All of which goes to show the contemptible pique the Government displays in regard to the Carson mint—nothing goes in a silver community.

The attitude of such of the corporations of the country as are resisting the war revenue tax by compelling their customers to pay it is foolish posing. They are simply intensifying sentiment against them uselessly, and which will possibly find expression some day in a way altogether unpleasant. At a time when every poor man, and every merchant and every wage-earner, the farmer, the publisher, the laborer and the artisan are paying their war taxes, the effort of corporations to escape theirs is the hight of folly.

At last we get what is evidently a truthful statement about the condition of affairs in the Klondike region. A statistical labor expert in the government service, who has just returned from Alaska, thinks "the Government will have to furnish transportation out of Alaska for indigent prospectors." Along with this report we learn that the necessity for government aid in the provision line is again agitated. It will take a great deal of Seattle fiction to overcome such facts as these.

The California mining law has been again sustained. The County Recorder of San Bernardino applied to the Superior Court for a writ of mandate to compel the Recorder of Virginia Dale mining district to deliver to him all records of the district. Judge Campbell holds that the mining law is constitutional, and directs the District Recorder to turn all his records over to the County Recorder.

PROCLAMATION.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
SACRAMENTO July 30, 1898.

WHEREAS, The Legislature of the State of California, at its thirty second session beginning on the Fourth day of January, A. D. 1897, two-thirds of all of the members elected to each of the two houses of said Legislature voting in favor thereof, proposed the following described amendments to the Constitution of the State of California, to-wit:

Amendment Number One.

[Being Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 41.]

A resolution to propose to the people of the State of California, an amendment to section eighteen of article eleven of the Constitution, in relation to revenue and taxation, by which it is proposed to amend said section to read as follows:

Section 18. No county, city, town, township, board of education, or school district shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof, voting at an election to be held for that purpose, nor unless before, or at the time of incurring such indebtedness, provision shall be made for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such indebtedness as it falls due, and also provision to constitute a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof on or before maturity, which shall not exceed forty years from the time of contracting the same; provided, however, that the City and County of San Francisco may at any time pay the unpaid claims with interest thereon for materials furnished to and work done for said city and county during the forty-third and forty-fourth fiscal years, out of the income and revenue of any succeeding year or years; provided, that any and all claims for making, repairing, altering, or for any work done upon or for any material furnished for any street, lane, alley, court, place or sidewalk, or for the construction of any sewer or sewers in said city and county are hereby excepted from the provisions of this section; and in determining any claim permitted to be paid by this section, no statute of limitation shall apply in any manner; and provided further, that the City of Vallejo, in Solano county, may pay its existing indebtedness incurred in the construction of its waterworks, whenever two-thirds of the electors thereof voting at an election held for that purpose, shall so decide. Any indebtedness or liability incurred contrary to this provision, with the exception hereinbefore recited, shall be void.

Amendment Number Two.

[Being Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 10.]

A resolution proposing to the people of the State of California an amendment to the Constitution of the State, by adding a new section, to be known and designated as section seven and one-half, article eleven thereof, providing for the framing by the inhabitants of counties, of local county government acts for their own government. The said proposed new section to read as follows:

Section 7½. The inhabitants of any county may frame a county government act for their own government, relating to the matters hereinafter specified, and consistent with, and subject to, the Constitution and laws of this State, by causing a board of fifteen freeholders, who have been, for at least five years, qualified electors of such county, to be elected by the qualified electors of such county, at any general or special election, whose duty it shall be within ninety days after such election, to prepare and propose a county government act for such county, which shall be signed in duplicate by the members of such board, or a majority of them, and returned, one copy there f to the Board of Supervisors or other legislative body of such county, and the other copy to be sent to the recorder of deeds of the county. Such proposed county government act shall then be published in two papers of general circulation in such county, or if there be not two such papers, then in one only, for at least twenty days, and within not less than thirty days after such publication it shall be submitted to the qualified electors of such county, at a general or special election, and if a majority of such qualified electors voting thereon shall ratify the same it shall thereafter be submitted to the Legislature for its rejection or approval, as a whole, without power of alteration or amendment, and if approved by a majority of the members elected to each house, it shall be the county government act of such county, and shall in such case become the organic law thereof and supercede any existing county government act, and all amendments thereof, and all special laws inconsistent with such county government act.

A copy of such county government act, certified by the President of the Board of Supervisors or other legislative body of such county, and authenticated by the seal of such county, setting forth the submission of such county government act to the electors, and its ratification by them, shall be made in duplicate and deposited, one in the office of the Secretary of State, the other, after being recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds of the county, among the archives of the county.

All courts shall take judicial notice thereof. The county government so ratified may be amended, at intervals of not less than two years, by proposals therefor, submitted by the legislative authority of the county, to the qualified electors thereof, at a general or special election held at least forty days after the publication of such proposals for twenty days in a newspaper of general circulation in such county, and ratified by at least three-fifths of the qualified electors voting thereon, and approved by the Legislature as herein provided for the approval of the county government act. In submitting any such county government act any alternative article or proposition may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to others.

It shall be competent in all county government acts framed under the authority given by this section, to provide for the manner in which, the times at which, the terms for which the several township and county officers, other than Judges of the Superior Court, shall be elected or appointed; for their compensation; for the number of such officers; for the consolidation or segregation of offices; for the number of deputies that each officer shall have, and for the compensation payable to each of such deputies; for the manner in which, the times in which, and the terms for which the members of all boards of election shall be elected or appointed; and for the constitution, regulation, compensation and government of such boards, and of their clerks and attaches; also, to prescribe the manner and method by which all elections by the people shall be conducted; and may in addition determine the tests and conditions upon which electors, political parties and organizations may participate in any primary election.

Whenever any county has, in the manner and method herein pointed out, adopted any county government act, and the same shall have been approved by the Legislature as aforesaid, the directions of sections four and five of this article providing for the uniformity of a system of county governments throughout the State, and likewise providing for the election and appointment of officers, and the regulation of their compensation, shall not apply. Said county government act shall, as to any of the matters hereinabove provided for and declared by such county government act, not be subject to any law or amendment enacted by the Legislature, except by amendment first submitted to the electors and ratified in the manner hereinabove set forth.

Amendment Number Three.

[Being Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 44.]

A resolution proposing to the people of the State of California an amendment to the Constitution of the State, by adding a new section, to be known and designated as section five and one-half, article six, thereby providing for the organization of a court, to be known as the Court of Claims. The said proposed new section to read as follows:

Section 5½. The Court of Claims shall consist of any three Judges of the Superior Court, who may be requested by the Governor to hold court at the regular terms thereof. The Court of Claims shall have exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all claims of every kind and character against the State, under such laws as may be passed by the Legislature, and its judgments thereon shall be final. The terms of the Court of Claims shall be held as follows;

In the City of Los Angeles, commencing on the second Monday of March;

In the City and County of San Francisco, commencing on the second Monday in July; and

In the City of Sacramento, commencing on the second Monday of November of each year.

The Judges holding such terms of court shall receive no extra compensation therefor, but shall receive their actual expenses, to be paid out of the general fund of the State treasury. The Legislature shall enact all laws necessary to organize such court, t provide the procedure thereof, and to carry out the provisions of this section.

Amendment Number Four.

[Being Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 37.]

A resolution to propose to the people of the State of California an amendment to the Constitution of the State, amending article eleven, by adding a new section thereto, to be known as section number five and one-half, relating to consolidated city and county governments. The said proposed new section to read as follows:

Section 5½. The provisions of sections four and five of this article shall not, nor shall any legislation passed pursuant thereto, apply to any consolidated city and county government now existing or hereafter formed, which shall have become, or shall become, organized under section seven, or secured a charter under section eight of this article.

Amendment Number Five.

[Being Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 36.]

A resolution to propose to the people of the State of California, an amendment of section fifteen and section sixteen of article five of the Constitution of the State of California, by which it is proposed to amend said sections to read as follows:

Section 15. A Lieutenant-Governor shall be elected at the same time and place and in the same manner as the Governor, and his term of office and his qualifications shall be the same. He shall be president of the Senate, but shall only have a casting vote therein.

Section 16. In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of his office, resignation, or absence from the State, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant-Governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease. And should the Lieutenant-Governor be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the State, the president pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy in the office of Governor shall be filled at the next general election when members of the Legislature shall be chosen, or until such disability of the Lieutenant-Governor shall cease. In case of a vacancy in the office of Governor for any of the reasons above named, and neither the Lieutenant-Governor nor the president pro tempore of the Senate shall succeed to the powers and duties of Governor, then the powers and duties of such office shall devolve upon the speaker of the Assembly, until the office of Governor shall be filled at such general election.

Amendment Number Six.

[Being Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 38.]

A resolution to propose to the people of State of California an amendment to section six, article nine of the Constitution of the State of California, relating to grammar schools by which it is proposed to amend said section to read as follows:

Section 6. The public school system shall include primary and grammar schools, and such high schools, evening schools, normal schools, and technical schools as may be established by the Legislature or by municipal or district authority, but the entire revenue derived from the State school fund, and the State school tax, shall be applied exclusively to the support of primary and grammar schools. Grammar schools shall include schools organized in a school district, or union of school districts, having more than one thousand inhabitants, in which a course of study shall be taught which will prepare pupils to enter the agricultural, mining, or scientific department of the University of California.

Amendment Number Seven.

[Being Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 34.]

A resolution to propose to the people of the State of California an amendment to section two of article four of the Constitution, in relation to sessions of the Legislature, by which it is proposed to amend said section to read as follows:

Section 2. The sessions of the Legislature shall commence at twelve o'clock meridian on the first Monday after the first day of January next succeeding the election of its members, and shall be biennial unless the Governor shall in the interim convene the Legislature by proclamation. The Legislature shall then remain in session for twenty-five days, after which it must adjourn to some date not less than thirty nor more than sixty days from the time of adjournment. If the two houses fail to agree upon a time at which they will resume their session, the Governor shall, by proclamation, fix a date for such reconvening, which shall be within the limits above prescribed. Upon re-assembling the Legislature shall complete its session. No pay shall be allowed to members for a longer period than seventy-five days, and no bill shall be introduced in either house except at the first twenty-five days of the session, without the consent of three-fourths of the members thereof.

Now, THEREFORE, Pursuant to the provisions of the Constitution, and an act of the Legislature of the State of California, entitled "An act to provide for the submission of proposed amendments to the Constitution of the State of California, to the qualified electors for their approval," approved March 7, A. D. 1883, the above described proposed amendments are hereby published and advertised to be voted upon, by ballot, by the qualified electors of the State, at the election to be held throughout this State on

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, AUGUST 5 1898

W. C. Wilson of Mojave is taking a vacation in the Sierras.

There was a slight shower of rain yesterday morning, just enough to cool the air.

Master Eddie Eibeshutz returned to San Francisco last Saturday to attend school.

Dick Williams is filling the title role of "The Mixalogist" at Irwin's "Old Corner."

All the criminal cases that were pending in the Superior Court have all been disposed of.

H. Levy has lately added a handsome new piano to the furnishings of the Independence hotel.

Miss Nellie Reynolds left for Los Angeles last Monday, where she will remain a couple of months.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Webb and Miss Irma Webb left Long Valley for Yosemite Valley last Friday.

Dave Johnson went to Keeler last Monday where he will temporarily take charge of the bar at the Keeler hotel.

S. G. Sneden, Esq., and John Clarke came down from Bishop last Sunday, on business connected with the estate of George M. Clarke, deceased.

Superior Judge W. A. Lamar, accompanied by his wife, will leave for Mono County on Tuesday, where the Judge will hold Court for Judge Virden.

Mrs. D. J. Hession and Miss Mamie Hession, Misses Edna and Lizzie Matlack and Ida Kispert, John Kispert, Ben H. Yandell and Avah Fell left to-day for a fishing trip in the mountains.

In this issue will be found the proposed amendments to the Constitution to be voted upon at the next general election. Every voter should study them carefully in order that he may vote intelligently thereon.

Hon. T. B. Rickey, W. M. Rickey and Chas. Summers arrived at Independence last Tuesday and spent the week in town, starting for home to-day. They came with their own conveyance from Carson.

The fact should be noted by interested parties that all proxies to conventions must bear a ten-cent internal revenue stamp, without which the proxy is illegal. Bear this in mind when the time of holding conventions comes around.

F. E. Densmore is removing a building that formerly stood west of his residence to a lot on Edwards street adjoining the Gill residence on the south. It will be remodeled and when completed will be occupied by S. W. Austin and family.

Ben Lasky came up from Lone Pine yesterday, returning to-day. He came in from Keynot a few days ago, where he has been engaged in mining and has taken out about sixty tons of good ore. Baldwin and Wilder are taking out good ore on their mine near the Keynot.

The trial of Manuel de Borba for the killing of Mariano J. Canadas, which occupied the attention of the Superior Court for the past two weeks was completed last Tuesday and given to the jury the same evening. After being out about five hours the jury rendered a verdict of "not guilty."

Henry Rhine and Misses Alice and Emily Rhine returned to San Francisco last week, after a short but pleasant visit to the home of their childhood. They came over through the Sierra Nevada mountains and had a most enjoyable trip. They intended returning the same way, but owing to the illness of Miss Emily were compelled to return to San Francisco by rail.

A meeting of the Republican County Central Committee was held at Bishop last Thursday. The time and place for holding the convention was fixed for September 22nd at Bishop. Wilford W. Watterson, Finley McIver and Frank E. Densmore were appointed delegates to the joint State Senatorial convention and the two first named to the State convention, which meets at Sacramento on August 23rd.

All are cordially invited to be present at these services.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

Here is another indication of the delicate poise of national power in Europe. The British Admiralty had made provision for building, this year, two additional battleships. But because Russia has determined to add six battleships to her navy the British Admiralty promptly asks for means to make an addition equal to that of Russia's. It seems impossible that such tension can long resist a snap.

Bank of England notes are numbered backward—from 10,000, hence the figures 00,001.

Letter From Big Pine.

BIGPINE, August 3, 1898.

A few days since the following young braves of the hamlet visited the cluster of lakes at the head of Bigpine creek; Sam McMurry Jr., Joe Steward, Willie Steward, George Hall Jr. and John Tibbetts. They came down Monday with visible proof of a good "gamey" outing. They report the large denizens of these mountain lakes as being reasonably susceptible—thirty-eight whoppers landed in two days under adverse circumstances in the matter of boating facilities, was voted a piscatorial victory by the members of the Eli Perkins club of the hamlet. Although a minority report was filed setting forth as a fact that certain members of aforesaid club had heretofore reported much larger denizen; but sticking to the rule of "never put a fish in evidence" the aforesaid minority report admits that the late catch was the largest ever displayed to the public.

These young men made a thorough inspection of the lakes anent the water-storage proposition mentioned in the late Swamperites, and are enthusiastic in recommending the early appropriation of this extra fluid. Steps in that direction will be taken by the ranchers of this vicinity as soon as the busy season ends. The river opposite the village presents evidence of exhaustion and shows that many interruptions have been experienced since its first jump from the mountains in the north. Yet notwithstanding the ever present memory of the oldest inhabitant the crops in this section proclaim that this valley is mighty near drought proof and has been able to pasture hundreds of head of fine horses from the citrus belt, in addition to the vast number of stock owned here.

Mr. Callow of the Williams House is taking steps to meet the convention possibilities and no one need miss the event of the season through fear of hunger or hardship. Much horse talk indicates that racing will be in vogue outside as well as in the convention.

Robert O'Neal Esq. was in the court of the hamlet last Saturday representing the people in a misdemeanor case.

The ladies of the M. E. Church will give an entertainment on Friday night at their church building, proceeds to be utilized in liquidating the well-earned salary of the preacherman; ice-cream and "things" done by the boss cookists of this section are always a drawing influence with those who know the ability of our "wimmen folks" in getting up a feat."

The contractor who is building the new knowledge shop thinks he will have it ready by September. SWAMPER.

The affair at Manzanillo resulted in the destruction of five gunboats and three transports belonging to the Spanish. It may be inferred that the work cut out for Commodore Told was as neatly performed as could be desired. Like Dewey and Schley, the Commodore destroyed the vessels he was sent to attack without losing any of his own men or suffering serious injury. This seems to be the method of our naval officials, and it is one calculated to win more approval and admiration than if the victories achieved were accompanied by a great deal of bloodshed. The system also leaves our brave men and ships handy in case of any foreign interference at the outcome.

An estimate has been made showing that the expenditures for carrying on the war thus far aggregate $123,000,000. This is at the rate of about $1,350,000 a day, an amount not likely to be greatly exceeded during the remainder of the contest. Perhaps $250,000,000 in round figures will suffice for our share of the expenses of forcing Spain to relinquish her hold on Cuba, even if the contest lasts three months yet.

It is estimated that there are nearly five million self-supporting women in the United States. Almost every branch of work known has been taken up by members of the gentler sex, and the trades and professions show the workers to have acquired skill and ability in the practice of their various callings.

Repartee In Congress.

In the Fifty-first congress there was a tilt between General Spinola and Elijah Adams Morse that was entertaining. The general always wore an enormous standing collar. It was so large that it is said that Tim Campbell approached him one day and tapped the collar with the ferrule of his cane, apologetically asking, "Is General Spinola within?" Mr. Morse was making a sort of a prohibition speech against the sale of intoxicating liquors in army canteens. General Spinola had interrupted him several times, and in reply the Massachusetts statesman finally twitted him upon the size of his collar. It stung the general to the quick. Taking the floor some minutes afterward, he called attention to Mr. Morse's language. "My collar," said he, "unlike the gentleman from Massachusetts, is immaculately clean, and if it was twice as high as it is and was placed around the neck of the gentleman from Massachusetts it would not serve to hide his ears."

The general was a political curio. He had a striking face and a martial air. In the Fifty-first congress he threw the house into convulsions by pointing to the painting representing a scene at the siege of Yorktown and gravely accusing Speaker Reed of counting the Hessians therein to make up a quorum.—Boston Herald.

Shot the Way the Dog Came at Him.

The other day Ole Hanson had trouble with a bellicose dog that belonged to his neighbor, a Russian of the name of Havva Drenkovitskey. The Swede shot the dog as soon as he discovered that he was not friendly to him, and the sequel found lodging in a justice's court. When Ole was propounded interrogatories by the attorney for the prosecution, he evidenced a sense of justice in framing replies that is rarely witnessed.

"What sort of a gun did you have, Mr. Hanson?" inquired the attorney.

"Es var two hole shotgun."

"Double barrel?"

"Yas, das et."

"Well, don't you think you could have scared him away?"

"Aye might of aye had not bane scare so lak deckens maesal."

"Why didn't you take the other end of the gun and scare him away?"

The grievances of sailors examined by the authorities in ports of entry, where the seamen belong, often turn out to be imaginary or greatly exaggerated. THE FAMILY STORY

CLIFFORD: SWAN'S * * * PANIC. * * *

"DEAR C.: Meet me at the Wheelmen's Rest on the South pike at 5:45 to-morrow evening. We can talk the matter over on our wheels. Very affectionately,

"ELSA."

Clifford Swan sat on an office stool and turned this little note in his fingers at the same time that he turned its import over in his mind. The clerk who sat near him could not resist an inquisitive impulse to look at Mr. Swan's face, and he saw that Mr. Swan was smiling satisfaction at himself; also, he saw that the little piece of paper in Mr. Swan's fingers was a feminine note, and he drew conclusions. That clerk would have greatly amused himself with putting teasing questions to Mr. Swan if the latter had not been his superior in the bank. So the clerk held his peace and wondered what there was in the note to make Swan look so happy.

Clifford Swan took another dive into the four lines of very modern feminine handwriting to refresh his memory as to the wording, and then he meditated again. It was, no doubt, an original way of answering his rather old-fashioned proposal, but her originality was always one of Elsa's great charms to this devoted lover. The idea of meeting a girl at a clubhouse on purpose to discuss a proposal of marriage with her while taking a spin! And then there was something so peculiarly sensible in the phrase "talk the matter over." Elsa really was a very sensible girl—so sensible as to be all the more piquant for this quite extraordinary good sense of hers. She was not the sort of girl to do anything rashly; she would calmly "talk the matter over" while riding out in the cool of the evening. Swan liked that deliberate way of looking at a serious matter; he judged from it that Elsa would be forever constant when she did make up her mind. True, she had already had four days to reply to his letter, but he had not the least doubt that in the end her decision would be favorable. Was he not her "Dear C." to begin with?

So Clifford Swan smiled as he sat at his desk. Then he looked at his watch and resolved to go and have lunch. He put the watch into his vest pocket and folded the little note and looked for the envelope from which he had somewhat precipitately torn it when Elsa's little brother had put it into his hands a quarter of an hour before. There it was—a pink little envelope.

The clerk next to Mr. Swan at this point indulged his curiosity once more. He saw Mr. Swan look with a tender smile at the envelope, and then he saw the smile faint and fade, and then he observed that Mr. Swan had turned pale.

"Are you feeling badly, Mr. Swan?" the young man ventured to ask with polite solicitude.

Swan started and stared resentfully.

"Feeling badly?" What do you mean?"

"You look so pale. I thought I might get you a glass of water—or something."

"Thank you, Mr. Edwards," said Swan with a forced laugh. "I don't know that I ever felt better in my life. I believe I'll go out to lunch now—very light breakfast this morning."

So Swan took up the envelope and the note and reached for his straw hat. He walked out of the bank, gazing at the address on the envelope, which was: "Miss Clara Henderson. Addressed." The inference was plain. That young brother of Elsa's—"Young Nick"—had had two notes to deliver. He was, in his own conceit, a born courier and scout, and it delighted him to ride his wheel all over the city, leaving notes and messages. If there had been no note for Swan the boy would not have stopped at the bank at all. The wretched urchin had no doubt whirled into the Henderson home, as he had whirled into the bank, dashed down his—Swan's—fate-fraught letter with a curt, "Letter for Miss Clara—no answer," and then sped away to chalk up his last record of letter-carrying. Therefore it was certain—morally—that Clara Henderson by this time had had the satisfaction of reading through her friend's reply to Swan's offer of marriage. So did Clifford Swan argue.

He ate no lunch worth mentioning, but sat and felt cold chills running about all over him, although the thermometer was far above 70 in the shade, and the sun was shining brightly. This was because he knew Clara Henderson so well. If it had been anyone else but that feather-headed——

That afternoon a ring at the door bell of the Davis residence was soon followed by a sound as if a hurricane had suddenly been let into the front hall. The rushing and rustling was mingled with laughter.

"Oh, I must see Miss Elsa. Yes, right away. Tell her I'm coming up to her room."

In less than one minute Clara was at her friend's door, standing behind the servant, who was supposed to be delivering her message.

"Elsa! Won't you let me in? I'm in a tremendous rush, dear——"

"I'm so glad to see you, Clara. Couldn't you go to-morrow?"

"Go? Go where? Ha, ha! Ha, ha, ha! Elsa, don't be angry. It wasn't my fault. I'm awfully sorry. Young Nick brought this for me, and it was meant for—for Mr. Swan. Ha, ha, ha! He, he, he!"

And with that the tempestuous young woman fell upon the bamboo couch, helpless.

"Clara! Did you open it?"

For answer Clara held out a bulky packet, the flap of the envelope torn.

"I give you my word of honor, Elsa, I only read as far as 'can confer on a woman'—'man can confer on a woman.' Then I nearly had a fit."

A less evenly balanced mentality than Elsa Davis' might have been temporarily upset by this revelation. As it was, Elsa's face was a bright scarlet. But she retained her self-command sufficiently to recognize a juvenile whistle that sounded shrill at that moment in the back yard, performing some variations on a popular air. Young Nick was oiling his bicycle. His elder sister threw up her window and called to him peremptorily to come up.

Clara was still on the bamboo couch, trying to recover her breath, when a youth of 8 years, in corduroy knickerbockers, appeared in the doorway.

"Can't go out now, sister. Got to oil up——"

"PLEASE GIVE ME MY LETTER," SAID CLARA.

"You took that note to Mr. Swan, did you?" his sister asked.

"Yes, sir. And I took the other to Miss Clara. Didn't I, Miss Clara? Did the whole trip in seven minutes an——"

"Never mind the time," Elsa interrupted. "Did you take that to Mr. Swan?" holding up the bulky letter Clara had brought.

"That's it," said the boy, nodding. "How did you get it back?"

"Go!" was all Elsa could say, and she slammed the door to, behind the puzzled youngster.
